

I. SUMMARY OF OPINION:

On the basis of my expertise, described in Part II below, I have reached the following conclusions:

- The Record: During the tenure of Jose Guillermo García Merino, Minister of Defense in El Salvador (October 1979–April 1983), El Salvador's Armed Forces (meaning both its military and security forces), engaged in a widespread pattern and practice of massacres, torture and arbitrary detention, extrajudicial killings, and other gross violations of human rights. Violence was indiscriminate and aimed largely at non-combatants. During the time General García<sup>1</sup> exercised decisive command and control over the military and security forces, these gross and systematic violations of human rights were among the highest in Latin America and the world. [Part III below].
- Military Responsibility and Impunity under Defense Minister García: In the context of repression and later civil war with the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, (henceforth referred to as FMLN), the El Salvadoran Armed Forces (ESAF) were responsible for the overwhelming majority of these human rights abuses. State terror was a deliberate policy characterized by clear patterns of conduct. Nonetheless, throughout General García's tenure as Minister of Defense, no officer was ever held accountable or prosecuted for human rights abuses. This total impunity could not have occurred without the direct knowledge, assistance and participation, both through acts of omission and commission, of Minister of Defense García. [Part IV below].
- Context: General García's pattern of deception, which characterized his tenure as defense minister, is evident by the manner in which he secured this highest office. In October 1979, General García was appointed Minister of Defense, the most important decision-making post in the military, by dissembling about his policy preferences and his existing alliances. At a time when demands for reform were at an all-time high, he portrayed himself as a reformer who would seek political dialogue with the opposition, but instead when he had already formed an alliance with right-wing extremist officers seeking a military solution to El Salvador's problems. [Part V below].
- The Power and Authority of Defense Minister García: General García, as Minister of Defense, was the single most powerful person in El Salvador from January 1980-April 16, 1983, a role he exercised in both a de jure and de facto capacity. With no effective civilian control over the military, Minister of Defense García had the authority to command the entire military and security forces, plan strategy with others, and order actions. He had the duty to promote and demote other officers, investigate crimes, and punish military officials who committed such crimes. [Part VI].

<sup>1</sup> An Important Note on Terminology: The Salvadoran Armed Forces (ESAF) includes the army, navy, and air force as well as the security forces, meaning the National Guard, National Police and Treasury Police. In this report, I will use the terms "armed forces," "military," El Salvadoran Armed Forces, or ESAF to refer to all combined forces. The term "security forces" is limited to the National Guard, the National Police and the Treasury Police. Note also that General García held the rank of colonel during much of the time discussed below, but since he was eventually promoted to general, this report will refer to him in this higher capacity. Many declassified documents refer to him as "colonel." Traditionally, "colonel" was the most powerful rank in the ESAF, with the exception of the president of the country, a military officer who was given the rank of general.

- Defense Minister García's Assistance and Participation in Human Rights Violations After Taking Office: Minister of Defense García used his extensive powers to facilitate and assist in widespread human rights abuses from the moment he took office. On the one hand, he built up the repressive capacity of the military towards non-combatants. On the other hand, he manipulated appointments to reinforce the role of extremist officers seeking "total war" and produce the calculated defeat of reformists inside the military." In the case of San Luis Finca, in particular, García's acts of commission and omission gave a "green light" to mass murder and state terror. [Part VII].
- Defense Minister García's Authorization, Assistance and/or Participation in Human Rights Violations by Protecting and Promoting Known Abusers and Presiding over the Descent into State Terror: Minister of Defense García protected and promoted officers with strong evidence of crimes in their records. Working with the High Command, he authorized or presided over actions, including numerous massacres, which resulted in the extrajudicial killings of thousands of non-combatants, torture and other forms of violence. Under his authority, and partially as a result of his actions, El Salvador descended into organized state repression terror and mass murder. [Part VIII].
- Defense Minister Garcia's Assistance and Participation in Human Rights Violations Through a Pattern of Deception, Deniability, and Failure to Conduct Investigations: By denying the existence of human rights abuses, blaming these abuses on disinformation and propaganda, and then failing to investigate them, General García obstructed justice. After May 1980, General García made no attempt at all to investigate human rights abuses, with the exception of those involving the murders of U.S. citizens. [Part IX].
- Defense Minister Garcia's Assistance and/or Participation in Human Rights Violations Is Illustrated through Five Specific Cases of Atrocity:
  - Case 1: the Rio Sumpul massacre: This May 1980 massacre demonstrates the denial and failure to investigate mass killings that characterized General García's actions in all 59 massacres listed in Appendix III.
  - Case 2: the murders of six FDR leaders: These November 1980 extra-judicial killings of the leaders of the civilian left opposition shows Defense Minister García's support and encouragement for extrajudicial assassinations as well as his failure to investigate the security forces involved.
  - Case 3: the murders of four American churchwomen: These December 1980 planned assassinations reveals the role of the Defense Minister in labeling these women "subversives," a veritable death sentence in El Salvador at the time. It also demonstrates the enormous external pressure necessary to have Defense Minister García conduct any investigation whatsoever as well as his involvement in a cover-up to protect the officer involved in the murders of these women.
  - Case 4: the Sheraton murders: These January 1981 extrajudicial killings again illustrates that Defense Minister García only ordered investigations under strong external pressure brought to bear in the murders of U.S. citizens. Once again, the Defense Minister repeatedly stonewalled this investigation and protected the officers involved in this crime.

- o Case 5: the El Mozote Massacre: demonstrates the Defense Minister's cover-up of the largest mass killing in contemporary Latin American history as well as his protection of the commanders involved.

In sum, through all of the actions, failures to act, and deliberate deniability documented below, Defense Minister García authorized, assisted, facilitated and/or participated in the worst civilian slaughter in Salvadoran history.

II. EXPERT CREDENTIALS<sup>2</sup>

The details of my expertise and my professional knowledge of El Salvador follow:

I am the Gildred Professor of Latin American Studies and Professor of Political Science at Stanford University. I am also Senior Fellow (by courtesy) of the Freeman Spogli Institute for International Studies and Bass University Fellow for Excellence in Teaching. Prior to my appointment at Stanford, I was Assistant Professor of Government at Harvard University. I received my Ph.D. in Political Science at Stanford University in 1982, with Special Distinction.

I served as Stanford's director of the Center for Latin American Studies for twelve years (1990-2002), during which period it was designated a "major center of excellence" by the U.S. Department of Education. I am a specialist in Latin American politics, especially Central American politics, military authoritarian rule, the organization and practices of militaries, civil wars, and the political economy of developing countries. I have extensive experience studying and analyzing human rights abuses and government responses to them. I speak Spanish and conduct my research in that language in Latin America.

I have received numerous awards, prizes and fellowships for my work on Latin American politics, and especially Central America. Most recently, I was awarded the Latin American Studies Association Honorary Martin Diskin Memorial Lectureship, and I received a Doctor of Humane Letters, honoris causa, from the University of San Francisco. Earlier, the Order of Rio Branco was conferred upon me by President Fernando Henrique Cardoso of the Republic of Brazil in recognition of service to Brazil and Latin America. The MacArthur Foundation, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation the Open Society Institute, and other foundations have supported my work.

At Stanford University, I have received the three highest teaching prizes and the university's volunteer service prize.

The thesis of my book, The Paradox of Plenty, was named by Time Magazine as one of "Ten Ideas Changing the World" and was designated one of two "outstanding books on Latin America in the Social Sciences and the Humanities" by the Latin American Studies Association.

I have published widely, including many articles pertaining directly to El Salvador.<sup>3</sup>

In my capacity as an authority on Central America and the Caribbean at Harvard, I frequently advised U.S. government officials or testified about that region during the period of civil wars. For example, I testified to the Committee on Armed Services of the U.S. House of Representatives, advised the Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Hemispheric Affairs of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, and briefed numerous U.S. government officials. For many years I presented high-level seminars before members of the Department of Defense, the Department of State and other government agencies, which included debates with then Assistant Secretary of State for Hemispheric Affairs Elliott Abrams over U.S. policy towards Central America. I led numerous congressional delegations to El Salvador.

I also advised the Secretary General's Office of the United Nations on peace talks in El Salvador and Guatemala and chaired (with Nobel Prize winner and former Costa Rican President Oscar Arias) "pre-talks" to end the wars in both countries.

I frequently lecture inside the U.S. and in Europe, Asia, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America and have written numerous opinion pieces for New York Times, Los Angeles Times, Boston Globe, etc. others.

My expertise on Latin America and specifically El Salvador has been repeatedly recognized in U.S. courts.<sup>4</sup> I have also previously assisted with the preparation of a report on political asylum for the Office of the Attorney General of the United States, and have prepared briefs about El Salvador for the Ninth Circuit and Eleventh Circuit Courts of Appeal.

My expertise on El Salvador is based on the following scholarly and direct knowledge: For thirty years, I have traveled regularly throughout Central America for research or policy-related purposes. For example, in September-October, 1983, I did research in San Salvador in my capacity as a professor at Harvard University. Among other trips, in January 1987, I visited San Salvador as a member of a congressional fact-finding delegation of the House Committee on Appropriations. In November 1993, I accompanied the head of the U.S. Electoral Commission to assess electoral reform in El Salvador, and in 1994 I was an official election observer in the U.S. delegation. More recently, I conducted research in El Salvador in 2009 and 2010, where I met with the President and the Minister of Defense.

In my travels to El Salvador, I have interviewed government representatives, including three presidents and three ministers of defense. I have also interviewed numerous military officers and some troops, guerrilla fighters, leaders of private sector institutions, trade unionists, representatives of human rights organizations, heads of all major political parties, leaders of peasant cooperatives, academics and university officials, and victims of human rights abuses, including torture victims and family members of the dead. I interviewed religious leaders from all denominations, including Archbishop Rivera y Damas; numerous cabinet ministers; three U.S. ambassadors, two Assistant Secretaries of State for Latin American Affairs, and many political and military officers of the U.S. Embassy.

My interviews extend across the political spectrum during the civil war. For example, prior to the presidential elections of 1984, I traveled throughout the country with Roberto D'Áubuisson, founder of the rightist ARENA Party and one of the key organizers of El Salvador's vast death squad network. I interviewed Christian Democratic Party officials, Carranza* (2005), and Department of Homeland Security in the matter of the Removal of Vides Casanova (2012). I am currently the expert witness in the Juzgado Central de Instrucción N.006, in Madrid, Spain, a criminal trial in the murder of six Jesuit priests in El Salvador. I have also been an expert witness about human rights issues for the Consejo del Estado in Bogotá, Colombia.

especially President Jose Napoleon Duarte. I also visited guerrilla-controlled zones and interviewed leading guerrilla commanders, including Joaquin Villalobos, the main military commander of the armed opposition, the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front (FMLN).

This travel and these interviews -- combined with other research conducted in Mexico (1983, 1984, 1986, 1989, 1991, 1994), Costa Rica (1983, 1984, 1985), Nicaragua (1983, 1987), Honduras (1987), Venezuela (1978-1979, 1983) and Washington, D.C. (1983, 1985, 1987, 1989) -- form the basis of my first-hand knowledge of El Salvador.

As an expert, I also rely upon major U.S. military reports about the Salvadoran military; oral interviews in Spanish of commanders of the Salvadoran Armed Forces; existing reports by the United Nations, human rights organizations and the U.S. government; English and Spanish language newspaper reports, especially from El Salvador; and the full range of scholarly literature on El Salvador that exists in Spanish and English.

As a result of my research, travel and study, I am especially familiar with the political and economic conditions prior to and during El Salvador's civil war, patterns of government repression, the practice of state torture and arbitrary detention, the military strategies of both the military and security forces and the FMLN, the unique command structure of the Salvadoran military, the corruption of the Salvadoran military and security forces, the practices of death squads, and the human rights violations of the opposition FMLN.

A Note on U.S. Declassified Documents: This testimony makes extensive use of the information cited above as well as additional information gleaned from the review of thousands of declassified U.S. government documents released by President Clinton and through Freedom of Information Act requests.<sup>5</sup> Note that all documents with either ES or EL numbers after the citation are available on line at The National Security Archive, <http://www.gwu.edu/~nsarchiv> in two El Salvador collections. Those that cannot be found online were cited elsewhere or culled from boxes of declassified documents not yet processed by the National Security Archive.

<sup>5</sup> These documents were declassified by the Clinton administration for use by the U.N. Truth Commission, but this declassification occurred too late to be of use. Their release had been requested by investigators from the United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, From Madness to Hope: The 12 Year War in El Salvador, U.N. Doc S/25500 (1993)(Truth Commission Report), but they were only made available after the Commission finished its work. The releasing agencies also identified over 3,000 documents that remained classified and are still unavailable; the reason given was to protect intelligence sources and methods. Many of the CIA and Defense Department documents are only available in the Library of Congress, located in Washington, D.C.

III. PATTERNS OF REPRESSION: THE RECORD:

El Salvador experienced mass state terror and/or civil war from late 1979-1991, producing an estimated 75,000-85,000 civilian deaths. After General García's appointment as Minister of Defense, the military and security forces, sometimes acting through death squads, tortured and murdered in unprecedented numbers; indiscriminate attacks against the noncombatant civilian population soared in number. In the early 1980s, according to Commission of the Truth established by the United Nations as part of the peace process to end the civil war,<sup>6</sup> "the systematic establishment of violence, and terror in the civilian population [...] were the essential characteristics of this period." Between October 1979 and April 1983, when General García was Minister of Defense, human rights abuses were among the highest in the world. When the numbers of El Salvador's civilian dead are compared to the better-known violations of human rights by military rulers in Argentina's "dirty war" or in Chile's Pinochet dictatorship, El Salvador's losses were of a far greater scale. [See Figure 1].

El Salvador Deaths Compared to Argentina and Chile<sup>7</sup>

<sup>6</sup> The Truth Commission for El Salvador (Comisión de la Verdad para El Salvador), established by the 1992 Chapultepec Peace Accords, was charged with investigating human rights abuses during the civil war. The Commission was to end impunity on the part of officers of the armed forces, as explained in Article 5. It received testimony from 2,000 people in relation to 7,000 victims, and gathered information from secondary sources related to more than 8,000 victims. In addition, 23,000 additional written statements were taken. From this evidence, the commission selected 13,569 cases and highlighted 32 cases that illustrated patterns of violence by the combatants in the war. Former President of Colombia Belisario Betancur chaired the commission, joined by noted jurists Reinaldo Figueredo (Venezuela) and Thomas Buergenthal (United States) -- appointed by the U.N. Secretary General.

<sup>7</sup> This author prepared this figure with populations determined at the time of each conflict and statistics taken from government sources of each country, with the exception of El Salvador, where a low estimate of 75,000 civilian murders is used.

This tremendous increase in atrocities coincided in time with General García's tenure as Minister of Defense as Figure 2 illustrates graphically by using Freedom House's Scale of Repression. In this scale, the yellow represents "very targeted repression," and the orange "targeted repression." The red shows exceptionally high "mass state repression," and it corresponds to García's leadership.

Figure 2:
The Scale of Terror

A. The Scale of Atrocities: At the height of the killings in this period, at least 9,000 non-combatant civilians died in a single year alone, averaging about 750 people per month, in this tiny country of five million people. This is close to .2 percent of their entire population -- an extraordinarily high statistic in any country by any measure. (If the same percentage of the U.S. population died in one single year, the number would be well over half a million people -- ten times the American losses suffered in the entire Vietnam War.)

B. Sources and Numbers: By the time General García “resigned” from his position as Minister of Defense in early 1983,<sup>8</sup> sources ranging from the U.S. State Department, to the Catholic Church, to the United Nations, estimated that at minimum tens of thousands of Salvadoran civilians had been killed. The government security forces and paramilitary units committed the overwhelming majority of these killings.<sup>9</sup> The exact number of victims of human rights abuses committed by soldiers or officers under General García’s command cannot be known.

Appendix II was prepared by this author with statisticians from Benetech from existing human rights data. It is a partial list of named victims that were murdered, tortured, and/or disappeared by military and security forces under the command of General García during the period he was Minister of Defense (October 1979-April 1983). Appendix II is the most comprehensive dataset currently available that lists all of the following information -- victim names, the unit responsible and the date and nature of the abuse. The dataset includes 1801 extrajudicial killings of named individuals, 920 reported disappearances, and 580 torture victims.<sup>10</sup> This is only a very partial list of the thousands of Salvadoran non-combatants who died during García’s tenure.

<sup>8</sup> In January 1983, Colonel Sigifredo Ochoa rebelled against Defense Minister Garcia, contending that he was a poor strategist and an incompetent and corrupt military leader. A compromise was brokered within the military: Ochoa was sent to the U.S. for a short time, and Garcia pledged to resign within three months. But then a second commander, Air Force General Bustillo also rebelled in late March; both colonels claimed that Garcia used a “crony system” to promote his friends into positions of power, but they proved incompetent commanders in the field. Interview with Col. Ochoa, 1983. See also “MAJOR NEWS IN SUMMARY; Heavy Shelling Marks Debate on Central America, New York Times, April 17, 1983.

<sup>9</sup> It is difficult to know the exact number of civilians who died, especially because deaths in rural areas where the majority of extrajudicial killings occurred were often not recorded. This means that the figures here are “best estimates.” U.S. State Department figures are systematically lower than those of the Catholic Church, human rights groups, or the United Nations due to the methodology employed by the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador. Figures in the early years of repression were culled from Salvadoran newspapers (according to the testimony of Secretary Thomas Enders to Congress), and these reports seldom published accounts of civilian deaths in the countryside. Since this is where the great majority of civilian deaths occurred, U.S. statistics of murders were, in Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Thomas Enders’ words, “underreported.”

<sup>10</sup> The Karl/Benetech dataset draws on the two most comprehensive data collections on human rights violations during the civil war in El Salvador. One was compiled by the American non-governmental organization El Rescate from the files of the Legal Assistance Office of the Archbishopric of El Salvador (see Howland, Todd, “How El Rescate, a Small Nongovernmental Organization, Contributed to the Transformation of the Human Rights Situation in El Salvador,” Human Rights Quarterly 30:3, August 2008). The number of rights violations reported in data from El Rescate underrepresents the rights violations that occurred in El Salvador during October 1979-April 1983, because (1) El Rescate data represent only violations that occurred on or after January 1, 1980, when reporting was

B. Civilian Targets of Human Rights Abuses: While General García was Minister of Defense, thousands of people were tortured and murdered for their supposed political beliefs: victims included members of all center-right, center-left, and leftist political parties ranging from Christian Democrats to democratic socialists and members of the Communist Party.<sup>11</sup> In addition to party and organization members across the political spectrum, extrajudicial killings and targeted assassinations also took the lives of peasants who were believed to be advocates or beneficiaries of land reform.<sup>12</sup>

Agents of the state targeted anyone believed to hold opinions opposing the traditional status quo and any organization believed to oppose the continuation of military domination. As the United Nations Truth Commission explained: "Anyone who expressed views differing from the Government line ran the risk of being eliminated as if they were armed enemies on the field of battle..."<sup>13</sup>

Special Targets: In urban areas, military forces especially targeted teachers and students as well as Catholic and Lutheran church people: in all, 18 Catholic priests were most difficult, and it focuses especially on violations occurring during and after 1982, and (2) it is not possible to compile a full census of all rights violations committed. The second data source is coded records of the non-governmental Commission for Human Rights of El Salvador (Comisión de Derechos Humanos de El Salvador, or CDHES). The CDHES data collection process is described in detail in Ball, Patrick, "The Salvadoran Human Rights Commission: Data Processing, Data Representation, and Generating Analytical Records," in Making the Case: Investigating Large Scale Human Rights Violations Using Information Systems and Data Analysis, Patrick Ball, Herbert Spierer, and Louise Spierer, eds., Washington DC: American Association for the Advancement of Science, 2000. Like the El Rescate data, the CDHES data represent an undercount of the total number of rights violations during the October 1979-April 1983 period, because (1) CDHES data represent only violations that occurred on or after January 1, 1980, and (2) it is not possible to compile a full census of all rights violations committed. In our compilation of data representing General García's years of command, Benetech statisticians note that "[r]eported violations may include duplications between or within datasets because two or more victims may share the same name. Reported violations are not necessarily representative of all violations by [the Salvadoran Armed Forces] during this period, because many episodes of violence were not reported to any organization and consequently do not appear in data on reported violence. Note, for example, sexual torture is especially underrepresented.

<sup>11</sup> Most military officers believed that even the center-right Christian Democratic Party (PDC) were "crypto-communists" due to its support for land reform, and they were convinced that the PDC was the central threat to their power. Thus, in 1980 alone, at least 64 PDC officials were assassinated by military-run death squads or uniformed troops.

<sup>12</sup> "Violence Against Agrarian Reform Beneficiaries and Workers Pertaining to Real Properties," Memorandum to Department of State, November 12, 1980, ES00853.

<sup>13</sup> "Any organization in a position to promote opposing ideas questioning official policy was automatically labeled as working for the guerrillas. To belong to such an organization meant being branded a subversive." See United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, From Madness to Hope: The 12-Year War in El Salvador, U.N. Doc S/25500 (March, 1993).

murdered (more than in any other conflict). In the most notorious cases during General García's tenure, Archbishop Oscar Romero was assassinated while saying mass, and four American churchwomen were raped and murdered by the National Guard [See Case 3 below].

Health professionals were another special target. In July 1980, a U.S. Public Health Association report entitled Abuses on Medical Neutrality listed more than 20 health professionals who were killed or "disappeared" in the first six months of 1980.<sup>14</sup> Examples abound: In May 1980, two doctors were kidnapped from the Cojutepeque Hospital while they were performing an operation and were tortured, then murdered. In December 1980, Dr. Juan Romagoza was captured and tortured by the National Guard. In 1981, a leader of the Salvadoran Red Cross was ambushed and machine-gunned in Soyapango. In 1982, the president of the Salvadoran Green Cross and his nephew were kidnapped from their homes and tortured. In April 1983, Dr. Angel Ibarra, director of medical services for displaced persons camps operated by the Lutheran synod of El Salvador, was abducted and tortured.<sup>15</sup> Human rights groups and members of the U.S. Congress protested attacks against physicians and other health personnel.<sup>16</sup>

Judges, lawyers and defenders of human rights were also murdered, threatened, intimidated, forced to resign and even flee the country, thus rendering the judiciary dysfunctional. At least 28 judges were killed during the 1980s, with 20 of them murdered during the period 1980-1982 when General García was Minister of Defense. Especially after the brazen February 22, 1980 death squad assassination of Attorney General Mario Zamora, who was killed in his home immediately after filing a complaint against the National Guard, serious <sup>14</sup> The report stated: "Death squads and uniformed forces have repeatedly entered hospitals and clinics and shot down patients, doctors, nurses and medical students in cold blood. These assassinations are frequently preceded by the cruelest forms of dismemberment and brutality." The report itself is cited in "Health Personnel: Victim of Human Rights:" Amnesty International, Index: ACT 75/01/91. The defense and security forces attacked hospitals that they believed treated civilians or armed guerrillas, killing doctors, nurses and patients in violation of international humanitarian law.

<sup>15</sup> These incidents, along with many others, were culled from Prensa Latina and Diario de Hoy Salvadoran newspapers as well as the report cited above..

<sup>16</sup> For example, members of Congress demanded the release of Dr. Carlos Vargas Lopez, believed held clandestinely in a jail run by the National Guard as well as the prosecution of his abductors. Dr. Lopez's "crime" was his protest against military attacks against patients being treated in the hospital area of San Salvador. "Abduction of Carlos Vargas Lopez, Who Protested Military Attacks on Hospital Patients," Letter, February 5, 1982. ES02560.

investigations in civilian courts slowed and halted.<sup>17</sup> With the attempted murder the following month of the judge who sought to investigate the assassination of Archbishop Romero, the climate of terror meant that the justice system was unable to function appropriately.<sup>18</sup> In the very few cases where they were given jurisdiction over a human rights case, fearful civilian judges who might normally have ruled fairly were vividly aware of the appalling consequences for their other colleagues<sup>19</sup> and simply refused to render verdicts against the military and security forces -- unless explicitly instructed to do so.<sup>20</sup>

C. Rural Targets of "Total War:" The Special Role of Massacres, 1980-1983

Despite the special prominence of some urban extrajudicial killings, the overwhelming numbers of civilian victims were peasants living in rural areas who were supporters or beneficiaries of land reform or refugees. When García was Defense Minister, the military and security forces, supported by their paramilitary groups formerly called ORDEN,<sup>21</sup> pursued a

<sup>17</sup> On February 22, 1980, on the request of Attorney General Mario Zamora, the Supreme Court authorized the judge of the Second Criminal Court to initiate an investigation into the whereabouts of two law students who had been "disappeared" from the parking lot of the U.S. Embassy. According to witnesses that included embassy personnel, members of the National Guard handed the students over to some men in civilian clothing who drove off with them in a private car. The students have never been found. The same night that charges were filed, Attorney General Mario Zamora was murdered. After that, no further investigations were carried out in this case. Karl interview with family members of the Attorney General, 1987. Other cases like the murders of Dutch Journalists followed this pattern. Also see United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, From Madness to Hope: The 12 Year War in El Salvador, U.N. Doc S/25500 (March, 1993).

<sup>18</sup> Judge Amaya was forced to leave the country, narrowly escaping with his life, after members of the National Police tried to kill him in his home. See his testimony here: http://www.leagle.com/xmlResult.aspx?page=13&xmlDoc=20041460348FSupp2d1112\_11369.xml&docbase=CSLWAR2-1986-2006&SizeDisp=7

<sup>19</sup> The consequences of any risks judges might think of taking were made horrifyingly clear in one case. According to a report by the International Commission of Jurists cited by the (then called) Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, "Five relatives of a judge of San Salvador, including two adolescents and a woman of 28, were assassinated on April 14, 1981. Their heads were severed from their bodies and laid at the doorstep of the judge's home." See "A Report on the Investigation into the Killing of Four American Churchwomen in El Salvador," Lawyers Committee on Human Rights, non-classified, September 1, 1981, ES02005.

<sup>20</sup> "What is ironic, the commissioners (all judges) wrote in the Truth Commission report, "is that the web of corruption, timidity and weakness within the judiciary and its investigative bodies greatly impeded the effective functioning of the judicial system even where crimes attributed to FMLN were involved." See Truth Commission Report. On the inability of the justice system to function during state terror, see Margaret Popkin, Peace without Justice: Obstacles to Building the Rule of Law in El Salvador (Pennsylvania State University Press, 2000).

<sup>21</sup> ORDEN was founded in 1961 and "officially" disbanded at the end of 1979, though it continued to operate well after that time. Originally founded to monitor the rural population for signs of any political organization, it served as an intelligence-gathering instrument of the Salvadoran armed forces, and senior military officers directly responsible counterinsurgency plan aimed at “draining the sea” they believed gave sustenance to the rebel forces of the FMLN. This meant a policy of what the military called (at different times) “total war,” “scorched earth,” “the Argentine solution,” and/or “limpieza” (cleansing), which involved the physical removal of civilian populations that might lend support to the armed opposition. As numerous reports and studies have pointed out, no distinction was made between armed groups and non-combatants.<sup>22</sup>

Thus widespread massacres distinguished the period of General García’s tenure as Minister of Defense. While some of these atrocities took place in the context of armed combat with the FMLN guerilla army, the first big action of the FMLN was not until January 1981 – well after the pattern of massacres was set in place. The Salvadoran Armed Forces considered the rural population both within and outside areas of conflict to be legitimate targets for attack, and thus in practice it established wide “free fire zones.” Military and security forces under General García carried out indiscriminate aerial bombings, massive artillery attacks and infantry advances that, in turn, resulted in massacres and the destruction of entire communities. These tactics also produced a record number of displaced persons – a whopping 25 percent of El Salvador’s population.<sup>23</sup>

Massacre victims included unarmed men, women, elderly and even children, as General García admitted under oath in 2000.<sup>24</sup> In the 1980 massacre of Rio Sumpul (see Case 1 below), to the military president led it. ORDEN was under the authority of ANSESAL, or Agencia Nacional de Seguridad Salvadoreña (National Security Agency of El Salvador).

<sup>23</sup> By the beginning of 1984, there were reported to be over a million and a half external and internal Salvadoran refugees, about 25 percent of the population. This included about 500 thousand internally displaced and the rest divided between the United States, Mexico and other Central American countries. <sup>24</sup> Attorney Robert G. Kerrigan: “You never heard of any complaint about the killing of women – I think the word is children and babies.” General García: “That depends on what type of abuses were being committed. Within the whole concept of when abuse has been committed, there were those kinds of people, yes, I guess, yes.” See Ford et al v. Jose Guillermo Garcia and Carlos Eugenio Vides Casanova,” Docket No. 99-8359-CIV-HURLEY, West Palm Beach Florida, October 18, 2000, 1105, lines 3-7.

for example, witnesses claimed that paramilitary troops from ORDEN, whose leadership operated inside the Ministry of Defense, threw babies and children into the air, “slashing them with machetes, cutting off their heads, and slitting them in two;”<sup>25</sup> two helicopter gunships shot at fleeing civilians who could readily be identified from the air as non-combatants. In an investigation of the 1981 massacre at El Mozote (see Case 5 below), forensic teams were able to identify the bones of 131 children in a burned out convent – all under the age of twelve. Their average age was six. None could have been a combatant.<sup>26</sup>

These massacres were characterized by torture, deliberate mutilation and cruelty. In the September 1980 massacre of Santa Rosita, for example, soldiers raped women, including one who was six months pregnant, then tortured and subsequently killed 17 people. An 18-year-old young woman named Julia was hung from a tree, sexually assaulted and then decapitated. Her younger sister, Hilda, was tortured by cutting out her tongue and subsequently killed.<sup>27</sup> In the July 1981 massacre of Rio Metayate, victims found the next morning under a suspension bridge<sup>28</sup> were mostly between the ages of 18 and 24, although a 16-year-old mentally disabled boy and a 12-year-old girl showing signs having been raped were also discovered.<sup>29</sup> The bodies had many “cuts all over,”<sup>30</sup> some had their throats slit by machetes, fractures and other signs of abuse and torture.

<sup>26</sup> The first forensic dig took place in November 1991 in El Mozote, and these digs are continuing to this date. The Truth Commission, in detailing this forensic investigation of the convent during the El Mozote massacre, notes that bone remains of at least 143 people were found, but the number of deaths could have been far greater in this one building. Because the building itself was burnt after the children were machine-gunned by army troops, “many young infants may have been entirely cremated and other children may not have been counted because of extensive fragmentation of body parts.”

D. Other Types of Abuses:

1) Extrajudicial killings and disappearances: The U.N.-mandated Commission on the Truth in El Salvador compiled one important indicator of the distribution of types of abuses committed by military and security forces. Among over 22,000 complaints documented by this Commission, 60% involved extrajudicial killings, 25% involved disappearances (which are presumed to be permanently disappeared), 20% involved torture, and some alleged more than one form of violence.<sup>31</sup> When disappearances are considered killings, a full 85 % of all violence involved extrajudicial killings. [See also the number of extrajudicial killings in Appendix II].

2) Torture: Despite Defense Minister García's persistent denials (see Section IX below), the practice of torture was widespread. Indeed, torture appears to be a calculated element of the military's strategy to instill terror in the population and defeat opposition to their rule. Not only could torture elicit "confessions" of subversive activity from civilians suspected of being sympathizers of the armed opposition, but the fear of torture also served to "pacify" the general population and bolster the authority of the military and security forces. According to the U.S. Government's 1983 Report on Human Rights in El Salvador: "The use of torture for interrogation purposes has been a regular, albeit unquantifiable, practice by some members of the Salvadoran security forces."<sup>32</sup>

The most frequent types of torture reported were severe beatings, death threats, choking, electric shock, smothering with a hood, drugging, sexual violence, submersion in water, burning with cigarettes, and mock executions. Females were especially subject to rape and sexual assault. The "Carter" technique (named after Former-President Jimmy Carter whose human rights policies were anathema to the military) involved slowly crushing the testicles of male prisoners.<sup>33</sup>

Even though most torture victims were eventually killed or too afraid to talk, evidence of torture is plentiful. Copious U.S. government documents, court testimonies, U.S. congressional <sup>31</sup> The extent of torture is seriously underestimated because bodies found with evidence of torture were listed only as murders, many of the disappeared were most likely tortured, and torture survivors often do not report this crime.

and non-governmental reports, newspaper reports, and testimonies from Salvadoran military deserters and refugees regarding torture are available.<sup>34</sup> The House Foreign Affairs Committee protested "indiscriminate torture and murder" by Salvadoran security forces by imposing restrictions on military aid,<sup>35</sup> and a number of organizations including the American Public Health Association, Amnesty International the American Civil Liberties Union and Human Rights Watch documented torture.<sup>36</sup>

In one example, a December 20, 1980 cable from the U.S. Embassy to the Secretary of State recounts allegations of large-scale torture, beatings, and gang rape taking place in an Army installation, the El Zapote barracks, which is located immediately across from the Casa Presidencial in San Salvador.<sup>37</sup> A June 10, 1982 secret cable describes the brutal torture of a Green Cross volunteer from El Salvador's leading humanitarian agency, who was captured by the National Police for handing out medicines to displaced refugees. Strapped to a rotating wheel, forced to drink caustic lime, and hung by ropes, the reports of his torture were leaked and widely reported, both internationally and in El Salvador, creating a firestorm in Washington.<sup>38</sup> When the U.S. Ambassador visited National Police headquarters to protest allegations of torture, Col. Lopez Nuila, the Director of the National Police (appointed by Minister Garcia), denied the <sup>34</sup> Salvadoran lawyer and former parliamentarian, Marianella Garcia, president of a Salvadoran Human Rights Commission, collected and reported increases in torture, including the use of chemicals to strip flesh and mutilate bodies beyond recognition. Known to human rights groups throughout Europe, her subsequent murder in mid-March 1983 was widely reported there, especially in Italy, Germany and Scandinavia due to her connection with Christian Democratic Parties.

<sup>37</sup> According to a 24 year-old chauffeur, who was held and tortured for 36 hours and subsequently confided in another informant, those detained at El Zapote included dozens of young people who were subjected to torture with electric implements and held in "bathtub-like tanks of water with electric current." A gang-rape of a young woman took place in front of the detainee, who was also taken to a hidden prison at El Churro ... existence of torture and accused the United States Embassy of "destroying the image of the National Police," "lacking loyalty" and "betrayal."<sup>39</sup>

In one of the most chilling cables, U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton reports having met with President Magaña, an ally of the military, to warn against the continuation of torture. Ambassador Hinton stated that he told Magaña: "We have solid evidence of torture of Salvadoran citizens while the individuals were in the custody of Security Forces such as the Policía de Hacienda, the National Police and others." When Magaña responded that "those nominally in command do not take effective counter-measures" and committed himself "to work with General García to attack the problem," (emphasis added), Ambassador Hinton wrote this private comment to Secretary of State Alexander Haig: "I am trying to carry out the sense of my instructions without setting off a possible chain of events which could lead to greater pressure on security forces to eliminate rather than release torture victims..."<sup>40</sup> [Emphasis added].

E. Atrocities Personally Seen by this Expert: During my time in El Salvador, I saw unidentified bodies with signs of torture lying by the side of the road leading to the airport, a body in the parking lot of my hotel, and a number of bodies in the countryside. Some of these victims had their mouths stuffed with branches or dirt to signify that they were killed due to their support for or benefit from land reform.

In the offices of the Catholic Church, I reviewed hundreds of pictures of bodies, many of which had signs of torture. Victims had been decapitated, had their skin removed, showed acid burns on their genitals and needles through lips, were hanged, strangled or riddled with bullets. I watched scores of people pass through these church offices in search of their family members and I visited makeshift morgues.

I visited El Playón (Photo 1), a body dump used by death squads operating out of the military and security forces. In 1982 I saw the mutilated bodies of people later identified as members of the centrist Christian Democratic Party that many military officers believed were “crypto-communists.” El Playón was less than three miles from the headquarters of three major military units, and the road between these headquarters and this body dump was heavily patrolled by the military. Victims could only have been placed there by or with the approval of officers of the armed forces.<sup>42</sup> The volcanic rock of El Playón was littered with femurs, jaws and skulls where bodies had been thrown.

F. Summary: General García and Repression: The death toll from massacres, extrajudicial killings, and direct assassinations by military death squads together with systematic torture and disappearances means that General García presided over the worst period of repression in modern Salvadoran history. At least 75 percent of reported violence in El Salvador

IV. RESPONSIBILITY FOR HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES AND IMPUNITY OF THE ARMED FORCES UNDER DEFENSE MINISTER GARCÍA

A. The military and security forces committed the majority of violations of human rights. The Salvadoran conflict began as state repression and turned into a full-scale civil war between two armies by January 1981.<sup>43</sup> All reliable sources (including U.S. government reports, scholarly writings, non-governmental human rights reports, the U.N. Truth Commission, and the statements of Salvadoran officers themselves) attribute the great majority of abuses against civilians to the El Salvadoran Armed Forces, meaning both the military and security forces.<sup>44</sup> Salvadorans at the time agreed with this conclusion, regardless of political persuasion.<sup>45</sup> The FMLN guerrilla army also violated human rights, particularly one armed group, but statistics repeatedly show that the overwhelming perpetrator of civilian deaths is the El Salvador Armed Forces. Indeed, a full 85 percent of the complaints filed with the U.N Commission on the Truth concerned abuses committed by the military and security forces, associated paramilitary units, and heavily armed killers in civilian clothing known as “death squads” that generally operated out of the facilities of the armed forces. Seventy five percent of these murders are attributable to military in uniform.<sup>46</sup> Especially in the early years of repression, the highest-ranking officers openly admitted the involvement of the military and security forces. Colonel Carranza, García’s Vice Minister of Defense (who was later held responsible for torture in a civil suit in the United States),<sup>47</sup> for example, explained: “Abuses are committed, and there may be some cases of torture, but this is <sup>44</sup> “Embassy reports make clear that the security forces and the military are responsible for much of the killings and human rights abuses in the country.” See Patricia Darien, “U.S. Response to Assassination of FDR Leaders,” Department of State, Briefing, December 4, 1980.

<sup>43</sup> While armed guerrillas operated in El Salvador as early as the beginning of the 1970s, these groups were initially small with little support. Repression fed their growth as well as their ability to unify. The united FMLN, made up of five smaller guerrilla groups, was not formed until October 19, 1980. The first important military actions of the FMLN did not occur until January 1981, well after the descent into mass state terror.

<sup>45</sup> See for example, the statement of Ambassador Deane Hinton, an ally of the military: “All civilians talked to, regardless of degree of support for the government, attributed the bulk of violent civilian deaths to the military.” “The Human Rights Situation in Eastern El Salvador.” Confidential, Cable San Salvador, January 17, 1983, EL00772. The major responsibility of the armed forces for the massacres, murders and tortures of civilians is not disputed, except by some officers from the period. Sources are varied, including all U.S. ambassadors to El Salvador who eventually reached this conclusion, whether serving under Democratic or Republican administrations as well as U.S. government or government commissioned studies. For example, a Department of Defense commissioned Rand Corporation Study in a scathing report discussing the “military’s killing and brutalizing of civilians” concluded that the armed forces “commit abuses with a regularity that squanders whatever goodwill they manage to engender.” See Schwarz, Benjamin C., American Counterinsurgency Doctrine and El Salvador, RAND, Santa Monica, 1991, especially pages 22-44.

<sup>46</sup> Some statistics are entered twice because they appear in two categories. See United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, From Madness to Hope: The 12-Year War in El Salvador, U.N. Doc S/25500 (March, 1993). Note that the FMLN also committed systematic human rights abuses, including kidnapping and murder, which I helped to document during the war. Nonetheless, there is no question that the level of abuse by the rebel forces was small when compared to that of the armed forces, and far fewer killings of civilians can be attributed to them. This is reflected in the small number of complaints lodged against them in the Truth Commission, about five (5) percent.

<sup>47</sup> http://scholar.google.com/scholar\_case?case=14600875171539553163&hl=en&as\_sdt=2&as\_vis=1&oi=scholar

because our men lack training and equipment.”<sup>48</sup> Colonel (b) (6) the commander of the very repressive National Guard, was more straightforward, stating that the security forces and the army were guilty of a “large number of the abuses attributed to them,” but “up to now the military high command felt that the benefits outweighed the disadvantages.”<sup>49</sup> Perhaps the most forthright of all (before he was warned not to openly make such comments) was another colonel, who remarked to this author: “We killed 30,000 peasants in 1932, and they were quiet for 50 years. All we want is another 50 years.”<sup>50</sup>

B. A Deliberate Policy: Massacres, murder, torture and other forms of abuse by the military and security forces formed part of a deliberate policy of state terror -- an “all-out war of extermination” against civilians to defeat demands for social reform and an end to the domination of the armed forces. State terror was aimed at fragmenting and destroying civilian opposition through mass murder and indiscriminate disappearances of members of political organizations, educational or religious institutions, trade unions, and peasant movements. Numerous academic studies as well as the U.N. Truth Commission dismiss: “all possibility that these [human rights abuses] were isolated incidents or excesses committed by soldiers and their immediate commanding officers. [...] Everything indicates that these deaths took place as part of a pattern of conduct, a deliberate strategy to eliminate or terrorize the population...”<sup>51</sup>

<sup>48</sup> The rest of Colonel Carranza’s interview in the Christian Science Monitor is especially revealing: “The first time the death squads appeared,” the Colonel said, dressed in combat fatigues and outfitted with a 45-automatic pistol and huge knife strapped to his hip, “they appeared in Brazil. Those in the death squads were police officials who shot criminals, mostly thieves. There was no law then and no way to put them in jail. Every time the police arrested someone, they were set free, so crimes went unpaid. We, too, found that the justice system did not punish the terrorists here who attacked the population and so we had to take measures on our own.” See Chris Hedges, “Congress Weighs Aid to El Salvador Security Forces,” Special to the Christian Science Monitor, May 30, 1984.

<sup>50</sup> This colonel was promised anonymity during our 1983 interview in San Salvador. He was referring to what Salvadorans call the “matanza,” the 1932 peasant uprising in the western departments that was suppressed by the military government led by Maximiliano Hernández Martínez. This rebellion ended in ethnocide, claiming the lives of anywhere between 10,000 and 40,000-peasants and indigenous people. A hero to the military, especially during the civil war, his name was given to one of the prominent death squads acting out of the military and security forces. This death squad used the El Playón body dump pictured above. See “Death Squad Denies Link to Right Wing Kidnapper...and Claims Responsibility for Bodies at El Playón,” State Department cable, San Salvador, 01099, February 9, 1982, ES02579. Pattern of Conduct: El Salvador is not a story of “a few bad apples.” The testimony of surviving witnesses and information from a wide variety of sources are remarkably consistent, and they reveal common archetypes of repression and specific atrocities suffered.<sup>52</sup> This is also the case with massacres. Their sheer number during the García period and the fact that these massacres involved all of the security forces, most military units, death squads, and the paramilitary in either individual or combined operations (as well as sometimes including the army of neighboring Honduras) demonstrate a deliberate strategy. This is evident in the (partial) list of 58 massacres compiled and presented in Appendix III. It is also evident by the occurrence of massacres in 12 of the 14 departments across the country, with the exception of border areas with Guatemala and Nicaragua. As the U.N. Truth Commission concluded: “It is impossible to blame this pattern of conduct on local commanders and to claim that senior commanders did not know anything about it.”<sup>53</sup>

Authorized from Above: Massacres Directed by the General Staff, Headed by General García: Copies of actual authorizations and/or orders cannot be obtained (and most likely no longer exist) for this period, but significant evidence demonstrates the responsibility of the High Command, presided over by Minister García, for the largest massacres. The Minister of Defense ran a highly centralized operation, as demonstrated in Part VI below. Where massacres involved uniformed soldiers and security agents as well as paramilitary units acting in combined operations, the coordination necessary required the active participation of the entire High Command, including the most important military decision-maker in the country. Combined operations involved a number of different forces and battalions (sometimes from neighboring Honduras), helicopters and other prized military equipment, and they required troop and equipment movements across the country. For example, the May 1982 massacre, called "la Guinda de Mayo" by peasants and "Operación Limpieza" by the Salvadoran military involved the coordinated actions of 19 different Salvadoran military units<sup>54</sup> and at least two Honduran battalions. An operation of this size and coordination could not have been carried out without authorization from the very top.

<sup>52</sup> This writer interviewed survivors of the 1980 and 1982 Rio Sumpul massacres inside a refugee camp located in Honduras in 1982. Their testimonies were consistent with reports from Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch, newspaper reports and other sources, and they were also consistent with “internal” refugees interviewed inside El Salvador who had survived other similar massacres. Many bore scars on their bodies. <sup>53</sup> United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, From Madness to Hope: The 12 Year War in El Salvador, U.N. Doc S/25500 (March, 1993)

The participation of armed forces from Honduras is especially strong evidence of authorization and coordination directed from the High Command, where General García presided.<sup>55</sup> Because the Salvadoran and Honduran military had a recent history of warfare and intense animosity, and any formal peace treaty to resolve their "soccer war" was not signed between them until after their first joint operation,<sup>56</sup> the Rio Sumpul massacre in May 1980, any coordinated activity would have to be determined at the highest level. In the May 1982 La Guinda military operation, several thousand Honduran troops were involved in across-state coordination. This could not have occurred without the agreement of the leaders of both militaries given their traditional animosity. Since this was a very significant change in the policy and relations between these neighboring hostile militaries, it is inconceivable that massacres involving coordination between them were not agreed upon, authorized and coordinated from the very top.

<sup>54</sup> These units included: the Atlacatl and Belloso (BIRI) Battalions, two battalions from DM-1 (El Sierpe y Los Tigres), two from DM-2 (Sesuntepeque), one batallion from DM-3 (La Union), one from DM-4 (San Francisco Gotera), one from DM-5 (Cojutepeque), one from DM-7 (Ahuachapan), one battalion each from Brigades 1-6, the Treasury Police, the National Guard, and troops from Cavalry, Artillery and the Air Force. Finally, two Honduran battalions were also involved and, most likely, one battalion from Guatemala (Los Caibiles). In all, at least 14,000 troops descended into this area, which was supposed to be a demilitarized zone between El Salvador and Honduras. See "Informe sobre El Operativo Militar de Mayo 1982", prepared in November 1992 as background for the Truth Commission.

<sup>55</sup> See, "Honduran Army Joins Salvador Battle," Associated Press and Edmonton Journal, July 4, 1982. "The Salvadoran Armed Forces confirmed Sunday that the Honduran Army crossed the border," reported the Telegraph Herald on July 5, 1982, which also cited a New York Times report that from 2,000-3,000 troops were involved in anti-guerrilla activities and massacres of civilians in eastern Morazán province.

<sup>56</sup> La guerra del futbol, also known as the Soccer War, was fought between El Salvador and Honduras in 1969 and did not result in a signed peace treaty until October 30, 1980, when both countries agreed to put their border disputes and immigration issues before the International Court of Justice, perhaps as a result of their coordinated activities in the first Rio Sumpul (1980) massacre. [See Illustrative Case 1]. The war displaced over 300,000 Salvadorans and led to strong animosity between the two militaries, thus it is not credible that coordinated military actions could have occurred without approval of the top commanders in the armed forces, including General García. In 1992, the Court awarded most disputed territory to Honduras. See Thomas P. Anderson, The War of the Dispossessed: Honduras and El Salvador 1969. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1981.

U.S. government officials certainly believed Minister of Defense García could control the mass killing of civilians in its “free fire zones,” should he be convinced to want to do so. Knowing that this would not be easy, Ambassador Hinton specifically requested that the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, and even the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff bring their combined pressure to bear on an obviously recalcitrant García<sup>57</sup> to curb this abuse during his visit to Washington. Ambassador Hinton warned of “reports of Salvadoran army massacres of women and children along the Rio Lempa and in Chalatenango,” and noted that an embassy official had witnessed a helicopter machine gun attack on unarmed civilians. Pointing out the difficulties in countering accusations “of genocide” under these circumstances, Hinton’s “talking points” for the Washington meeting with García are notable:

- Creation of free fire zones in El Salvador or army-air force behavior as if such zones exist could have gravest consequences for our continued cooperation and our hopes to provide continued U.S. assistance.
- U.S. public opinion and congressional support for administration could be rapidly eroded unless García and company keep their forces under strict control.
- In my view, García will take message more seriously if it comes from SECDEF as well as SECSTATE. In addition, perhaps blunt talk by senior U.S. general, e.g., Chairman, JCS, would be effective.<sup>58</sup>

C. The State Assumes Formal and Legal Responsibility: That the military and security forces were responsible for the great majority, though not all, human rights abuses has been recognized by the State of El Salvador in a number of recent judicial proceedings and formal events. For example, the State acknowledged formal responsibility for the March 1980 murder of Archbishop Romero and subsequent failure to investigate, the December 1981 massacre of more than 1000 villagers in El Mozote,<sup>59</sup> and other specific crimes. Most important, in 2010 the State of El Salvador also accepted the responsibility for widespread atrocities carried out by state institutions, especially the military and security forces, which committed:

<sup>57</sup> This reluctance is noted repeatedly in U.S. documents and is also noted in the study of the Salvadoran military by U.S. General Woerner Commander of the Southern Command, who writes about the leadership of their military: “There exists an acceptance of and numbness to, the use of force. This in turn has promoted a rationalization among the combatants that serves to legitimize violence.” See “Report of the El Salvador Military Strategy Assistance Team (Draft),” Brigadier General Fred Woerner, San Salvador, El Salvador: September 12, 1981, ES02030.

“grave violations of human rights and abuses of power, made illegitimate use of violence, broke the constitutional order and violated basic norms of decency and peace. The crimes committed included massacres, extrajudicial killing, forced disappearances, torture, sexual abuse, arbitrary deprivation of liberty and other acts of repression. The majority of these abuses were committed against defenseless civilians far from conflict. The state is responsible, both for its actions and well as its omissions...”<sup>60</sup>

D. Absolute Impunity: Despite gross and systematic violations of human rights, not a single Salvadoran military officer was ever held accountable for human rights abuses during the tenure of General García. What is especially striking, given this abysmal record of widespread abuse, is that no senior military officer was ever prosecuted for human rights crimes until 1991.

This impunity has been repeatedly recognized. As one declassified document states: “The Salvadoran officer corps traditionally has escaped prosecution for any human rights violations.”<sup>61</sup> Concerns regarding the impunity of the officer corps are raised frequently in Department of Defense studies,<sup>62</sup> the Truth Commission Report, and in testimony presented to the U.S. Congress. As Ambassador Corr stated, summing up the period including General García’s tenure as Minister of Defense: “We were unable to prosecute an officer on a human rights crime... Not only has no higher ranking officer ever been convicted of a human rights violation, none has been dismissed for ineptitude in combat or gross misuse of government funds or other corrupt practices.”<sup>63</sup>

This total impunity was a deliberate policy stemming from the very top of the armed forces hierarchy. In case after case, as demonstrated below, impunity could not have occurred without the direct knowledge, assistance and participation of Minister of Defense García. Massacres and other widespread violations of human rights were reported to him repeatedly, yet there is no evidence that any effort was made to investigate them. To the contrary, justice was repeatedly denied, delayed or obstructed through acts of commission and omission.

V. CONTEXT: GARCÍA TAKES CONTROL FACING DEMANDS FOR REFORM

General García was the single most powerful figure in the Salvadoran military and security forces during his tenure as Defense Minister. To understand why he exercised power and authority in the mode that he did requires a brief examination of El Salvador's history and the means by which the Defense Minister came to power.

A. Traditional Military Dictatorship: El Salvador's armed forces were different from those in countries with civilian control. Historically, El Salvador's armed forces were the government, forming one of the longest continuous military dictatorships in Latin American history. A series of military governments or military-dominated governments ruled this tiny country almost without interruption from 1932 until the end of the Salvadoran civil war in 1992. This constituted one of the longest standing military dictatorships in Latin American history. For sixty years, the Salvadoran Armed Forces was both the government and the most powerful organization in the country.<sup>64</sup> [Figure 4].

All military governments were allied with the country's wealthiest landowners, often referred to as the "oligarchy" or the "fourteen families." Land was the key to the wealth of this small group; the oligarchy owned a full 78 percent of El Salvador's arable territory that was operated in a feudal-like system. Labor exploitation was notorious; landowners paid virtual entrenched in the mentality of the officer corps and is not likely to diminish for many years." See U.S. Ambassador Edwin Corr's detailed discussion in "Post Plan Reporting: Military's Response to Human Rights Accusations," June 29, 1988, EL00961, from Ambassador Edwin Corr, U.S. Embassy San Salvador, to U.S. Department of State.

<sup>64</sup> Its power was formally based on the Military Code of El Salvador, Ordenanza del Ejército. See Military Code of El Salvador, Ordenanza del Ejército (1934). The Ordenanza was adopted after what Salvadorans call the Great Massacre or Matanza of peasants in 1932, and it makes the armed forces the most powerful institution in the country.

slave wages to rural workers planting coffee, sugar cane, and cotton; they kept their workers under control through a system of repression conducted principally by the National Guard, other security forces and their associated paramilitary, ORDEN. By the outbreak of civil war, El Salvador represented one of the clearest cases of acute labor exploitation in the world.<sup>65</sup>

The armed forces, especially the National Guard, guaranteed the perpetuation of this highly unequal and desperately poor coffee exporting economy and, in return, the officer corps especially benefited. Tasked especially with prohibiting trade union organizing among rural workers,<sup>66</sup> the National Guard was the most elite military force, the best paid, and the most

<sup>65</sup> In 1978, over 70 percent of the Salvadoran population lived in abject misery. Fifty-eight percent of the population earned ten dollars or less a month and most of the rural population had work for only one third of the year. Seventy percent of children under five years of age were malnourished, the enormous majority of the population had no access to medical care, and per capita caloric consumption rate was the lowest in the western hemisphere. Shortly before open conflict began, El Salvador's per capita income was the lowest in Latin America and it was one of the poorest of the developing countries. Besides the acute land concentration, 95 per cent of the rural population was illiterate. See Sujit Dutta, "El Salvador: Towards Another Vietnam," Social Scientist, Vol. 10, No. 2 (Feb., 1982).

<sup>66</sup> The National Guard was paid three times as much as most army soldiers after its formation; it took on the chief task of enforcing the 1907 Agrarian Code (Ley Agraria) that prohibited trade union organizing among rural workers. National Guard posts were often located on coffee estates, and the National Guard often served as a virtual employment agency for landlords and industrialists seeking security force personnel who would do security work for companies and farms. See "Preliminary Assessment of the Situation in El Salvador," Declassified State Department Cable, San Salvador, March 19, 1980, ES02038.

closely aligned with the coffee oligarchy. In urban areas, the National Police served a similar function, targeting trade unionists, religious personnel, teachers and others seeking to change this system of gross inequalities. In this system, the very small officer corps was the privileged class inside the military; officers perpetuated their own power,<sup>67</sup> and they used their position to benefit the Salvadoran Armed Forces as an institution<sup>68</sup> as well as to become wealthy themselves.<sup>69</sup> Notoriously corrupt,<sup>70</sup> especially at the very top where sinecures such as ANTEL (the military-run telephone company) were controlled,<sup>71</sup> the officer corps acted as "a West Point protection racket gone berserk."<sup>72</sup> Their system permitted a rotating distribution of financial rewards as

<sup>67</sup> The officer corps was the sole road to upward mobility in a rigid social structure. In order to enter the Gerardo Barrios Military School, a candidate had to be recommended by a high-ranking officer, with the children of military families getting preferential treatment. This created a privileged military caste.

<sup>68</sup> The military's social security fund allowed the Salvadoran Armed Forces to become the single most powerful economic institution in El Salvador. This fund grew from less than $2 million in 1980 to more than $100 million in 1988. These benefits were normally reserved only for officers.

<sup>69</sup> Officers received payoffs from men doing business in their territory; they made profits on food budgets of the troops under their commands; they would siphon monies from a unit's payroll; and they were offered directorships and jobs in private business after retirement. In one well-known case, the chief of staff of the Salvadoran army was convicted in a US federal court in New York for his part in a scheme to sell $2.5 million worth of machine guns to American gangsters; he was supposed to be providing these weapons to his own troops. See Joel Millman, "El Salvador's Army: A Force Unto Itself." New York Times Magazine. December 10, 1989.

<sup>70</sup> As this author and others discovered in investigations conducted in El Salvador for members of the U.S. House of Representatives, as U.S. aid poured into the country, senior officers invented "ghost soldiers" and pocketed the paychecks of these phony men under their command; they kept dead soldiers on the payroll so senior officers could collect their salaries, and they forced conscripts to buy high-priced food (some of it marked as U.S. aid/not for sale), new uniforms and even boot polish at a profit to their commanders. The Rand Corporation's especially damning report on this subject notes that "the greed and apparent tactical incompetence of Salvadoran military officers has so exasperated American experts posted in El Salvador that all the individuals interviewed for this report... believe that the Salvadoran military does not wish to win the war because in doing so it would lose the American aid that has enriched it for the past decade." Benjamin Schwarz, American Counterinsurgency Doctrine and El Salvador, RAND (1991). See also Joel Millman, El Salvador's Army: A Force onto Itself, New York Times Magazine, December 10, 1989.

<sup>71</sup> A colonel told reporters that he had found between $12 and $18 million dollars of fictitious invoices relating to an earth satellite station while briefly examining ANTEL files. Gun-running operations, the resale of U.S. military equipment to underworld figures (as a notorious case involving the Army Chief of Staff Col, Manuel Rodriguez showed), the theft of U.S. economic aid, and the systematic robbery of remittances were also sources of great profit. See Adam Hochschild, Inside the Slaughterhouse, Mother Jones, June 1983 and The Titusville Herald, June 16, 1976.

<sup>72</sup> This is the conclusion of one of the best studies of the Salvadoran Armed Forces by the U.S. military, often called "the four colonels" report. See A.J. Bacevich, etc. American Military Power in Small Wars: The Case of El Salvador (1988); on corruption, see also William Stanley, The Protection Racket State: Elite Politics, Military Extortion, and Civil War in El Salvador (1996). officers gained seniority, and it fostered strong institutional self-protection through loyalty to the group.<sup>73</sup> The net result was complete impunity for officers regardless of their behavior and a strong landowner-military alliance to perpetrate military rule.

B. The Growth of Opposition and the Military's Strategic Dilemma: Given widespread poverty and miserable living conditions, demands grew for land reform, a minimum wage, and an end to the military rule that blocked both. By the 1970s, the ruling Salvadoran Armed Forces and their landlord allies faced a strategic dilemma: to permit a measure of reform that could defuse an increasingly volatile situation or to repress reform completely. When the Salvadoran Armed Forces cancelled the 1972 elections to prevent the unprecedented presidential victory of Jose Napoleon Duarte from the Christian Democratic Party in a failed effort to stem the reformist tide, and when one military president attempting to carry out a very modest land reform<sup>74</sup> was overthrown in 1977 by hardline officers, the Salvadoran Armed Forces unleashed a new round of targeted repression.

But rather than crush dissent as in the past, this new round of repression sparked unprecedented civilian mobilization and unity through the formation of a huge popular movement, the largest in El Salvador's history. This "popular forum" represented an alliance between 14 civilian organizations, including all three non-military parties from center-right to left; it demanded free and fair elections, a minimum wage, land reform, an end to repression, and the transition to democracy. Different groups of armed leftist rebels also challenged the military, but since they were still small and disunited at this point (only becoming a powerful guerrilla movement after the massive repression of 1980),<sup>75</sup> the armed forces viewed this civilian popular mobilization as a far greater threat to their rule.

<sup>73</sup> As one declassified document expressed it: "...the officer corps is a cohesive and insular group with strong lifelong loyalties, particularly to fellow members of each graduation class, or tanda. As a result, officers rarely cooperate in the prosecution of their colleagues." See "[Discusses Salvadoran Military Immunity to Punishment]," Article, August 24, 1990, EL00331. Bosch, The Salvadoran Officer Corps and the Final Offensive of 1981, Report of the El Salvador Military Strategy Assistance Team (1981) and Benjamin Schwarz, American Counterinsurgency Doctrine and El Salvador, RAND (1991).

<sup>74</sup> This minimal reform, though suggested by a military president, provoked an immediate ominous response with the military, that is, the appearance of the Armed Forces for Anti-Communist Liberation (FALANGE), a death squad that immediately sentenced a number of regime opponents to death, especially teachers, journalists, priests and trade unionists. This original squad arose from ANSESAL, the intelligence unit of the armed forces, where Roberto D'Aubuisson operated (see below), but was linked quickly to the intelligence section (S-2) of the National Guard.

C. The October 1979 Coup: The end of military rule seemed inevitable when a group of younger reformist military officers (Juventud Militar or Young Officers Movement) sided with the civilian opposition for the first time and overthrew General Romero in October 1979. Demanding a transition to civilian rule, an end to human rights abuses and a significant land reform, these reformist officers invited civilian representatives of the opposition to join them in a provisional civil-military junta aimed at transitioning to democracy. To demonstrate their intentions, the Young Officers Movement immediately decreed the disbanding of the repressive and widely feared civil guard (ORDEN) and the military intelligence center (ANSESAL). It also freed political prisoners, purged or retired some well-known repressive officers, and scheduled elections for February 1982. These young officers strongly believed that reform was essential for avoiding widespread bloodshed – a position presciently echoed by U.S. Ambassador Robert White, who warned Secretary of State Cyrus Vance of the possibility of “a great deal of unselective phoenix-type killing...”<sup>76</sup>

D. García Maneuvers into the Position of Minister of Defense: For General García, the Young Officers coup proved to be both a challenge and an opportunity. The challenge was to seek a strategy that would maintain the overwhelming power of the military and his position within it while simultaneously retaining U.S. assistance, which appeared increasingly likely to disappear.<sup>77</sup> The opportunity was to become the most powerful person in El Salvador --, a

<sup>75</sup> The armed opposition, which was eventually called the Farabundo Martí Liberation Front, was initially small and very divided. As repression grew, the armed opposition grew as well and eventually united in the FMLN at the end of 1980.

<sup>76</sup> “If something like the foregoing does not happen, I can see the security forces impelled by the logic of their brutality against the poor, joining forces again with the reactionary right, their traditional home. The army, which prizes unity, would in all probability be dragged along by the national guard and police, a great deal of unselective phoenix-type killing would follow over the next four to six months, providing the ultra-left a field-day for stirring up popular indignation.” See “Preliminary Assessment of Situation in El Salvador,” Secret Cable, 2038, March 19, 1980, EL00665.

<sup>77</sup> In September, shortly before the October 1979 coup, Assistant Secretary of state for Latin American Affairs, Viron Vaky, called for reform in Central America and noted that El Salvador was the country most likely to collapse without badly needed reform – a speech that was viewed inside the military as a warning for it to “put its house in order.” Michael McClintock, The American Connection: El Salvador, Zed Books, 1985. Later, Ambassador Robert White, backed by the Carter Administration, insisted on evidence of reform, particularly a land reform.

desirable goal for this ambitious senior officer who had expected to be named military president in 1977 and instead saw his presidential aspirations and those of colleagues working with him in the telephone company (ANTEL) blocked by General Romero.<sup>78</sup> It did not take him long to accomplish both.

In a behavior pattern that would become familiar, General García played all sides in the intense struggle for a new provisional government -- telling all politically relevant actors what they wanted to hear and dissembling whenever necessary. Having already secretly plotted a coup himself as early as May 1979 with the assistance of his ANTEL group and notorious hardliners like Cols. Carlos Eugenio Vides Casanova and Major Roberto D'Áubuisson<sup>79</sup>, García then proved adept at reassuring the reformers that he actually was one of them. This was especially important to gain the support of both the Young Officers Movement as well as U.S. officials inside El Salvador who knew about the coup beforehand, knew García, and favored a modest land reform.<sup>80</sup> To both, García presented himself as a reformer disdained by (soon-to-be

<sup>78</sup> The "Equipo Molina," which would form the high command after the October 1979 coup, was a group of officers that had once been the special presidential guard of President Molina and been marginalized under the Romero military government that overthrew Molina. Three of these officers—Gutiérrez, García, and Carranza—had held prime positions under the former Molina administration, jointly controlling the national telephone company ANTEL. Using false invoicing and misallocation of $16 to $18 million, they had made "extra" monies, according to New York Times reporter Raymond Bonner, Weakness and Deceit. U.S. Policy and El Salvador, Times Books, New York, 1984. Bonner quotes a U.S. diplomat: "You're entitled to your piece of the plunder, but not to that magnitude." Thus, Romero's selection as military president not only cost García the presidency, but also removed him and his associates from their ANTEL positions and sent them to lower-status troop commands (or in Gutiérrez's case, to a repair shop). See also William Stanley The Protection Racket State: Elite Politics, Military Extortion and Civil War in El Salvador. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 151.

<sup>79</sup> On October 5, 1979 President Romero personally accused García, Vides Casanova, and Gutierrez of plotting against him. In fact, in May 1979, García, Gutierrez and Vides Casanova held conversations with several majors of the 1963 class, especially Major Roberto D'Áubuisson, and they agreed to pool resources in planning a coup. This planning proceeded smoothly, and by October, Colonel García and his ANTEL colleagues, Colonel Gutierrez and Colonel Vides Casanova had already won over the majority of middle-ranking officers and sought the support of the military regimes of Brazil, Chile, Argentina and Panama. Interviews with military officers by this author, 1981-2009 and "General Jose Guillermo García Merino," Excised Copy, Central Intelligence Agency, September 12, 1986. EL00210.

<sup>80</sup> Unlike many of the other colonels, García was known to U.S. officials, who seemed initially to believe his protestations in support of broad reform. Salvadoran military and political elites "almost universally believed" that Gutiérrez, García and Colonel Nicolás Carranza (who became vice-minister of defense after the coup) were on the CIA payroll because the CIA routinely established contacts with national telephone systems, where raw intelligence was gathered. "Officials like Gutiérrez, Carranza, and García who had held top positions in ANTEL in the 1970s were likely to have had such connections," Stanley (1996, 144), wrote; in Carranza's case, he admitted his role as a paid informer in court testimony. The other candidate for defense, Colonel Rene Guerra, was a reformer that had led junior officers in the October coup and was unknown to U.S. officials. See also, Dial Torgerson, "El Salvador's Defense Minister a Skilled Survivor—at Politics". Los Angeles Times 10 Apr 1983: a8. On U.S. knowledge about the deposed) President Romero – a leader who had the capacity to unite recalcitrant senior officers with their progressive junior counterparts. To reformists inside the military, he also argued that, unlike the other candidate for defense minister, he had the support of the U.S.

Given García's protestations in favor of a "just struggle" for widespread reform<sup>81</sup> and his actual support for a modest land reform, the Juventud Militar was persuaded to accept García by Colonel Jaime Abdul Gutiérrez, a senior officer working with the young officers. Gutiérrez, who had formed a partnership with García earlier when both worked at ANTEL, in effect unilaterally appointed García as defense minister even before the civil-military junta was fully formed.<sup>82</sup> The very first declaration of the new civil-military junta was the selection of García as the new Minister of Defense and Public Security.

Thus, García received the top position he sought. The Young Officers Movement seemed not to understand that their new defense minister had a record of human rights abuses in his earlier command position,<sup>83</sup> and they were also initially unaware that he had already built an alliance with members of the extremist right inside the military that sought a military solution to the growing divisions in El Salvador. The Young Officers Movement, to the contrary, actively sought dialogue with the "popular forum" as well as with armed guerrilla groups; they wanted a political solution to spiraling violence in the country and an eventual end to military rule. While reformist officers and civilians believed they were dismantling the repressive apparatus of the coup-planning, see "Salvadoran Military Plans for Possible Coup," Secret cable, excised copy, Central Intelligence Agency, June 5, 1979, EL00004.

<sup>81</sup> General García built support for himself by tailoring his views to his naïve and idealistic audience, according to interviews with leaders of the Young Officers Movement. One of these officers, Mena Sandoval, wrote about how García and Vides Casanova declared themselves to be in full support of the young officers' 'just struggle.' Mena writes, 'I personally, when I listened to García talk about institutionalism, love of profession, commitment to the fatherland...I truly believed what he was saying' (Mena Sandoval 1983, 448)." U.S. officials also initially believed his rhetoric of reform.

<sup>82</sup> As Stanley (1996, 142) notes: The decision of the Young Officers Movement to incorporate Gutiérrez into the movement appears, in retrospect, to have been a serious error. He immediately began contesting the junior officers for control, attempting to discredit Guerra as a leftist, and seeking to include his colleagues García and Vides in the plot." (This is according to a retired senior official who was involved in the Vides/García plot. Interview, September 1989).

<sup>83</sup> On October 17, 1979 García, Gutiérrez, René Guerra and Majano (the latter two leaders of the Young Officers Movement) met with Archbishop Romero. During this meeting Mon. Romero accused García of human rights violations in San Vicente during his tenure as commander of the local garrison. Because written records of violations were not kept from this period, this cannot be statistically documented but there is recorded testimony of such violations by San Vicente troops.

past, the new defense minister and his supporters already had a different plan. One CIA intelligence document captured this perfectly: "Nearly three fourths of the officers are decidedly conservative, and Defense Minister García—the strongman in the government—represents a consensus view that the lasting solution to the extreme leftist problem should be military rather than political."<sup>84</sup>

By early 1980, Defense Minister García was the most powerful man in the country. As one declassified U.S. document put it: García "helped plan the coup that toppled the Romero regime" and instead of seeking a seat on the civil/military junta "chose to become Minister of Defense where he gained operational control of the Armed Forces and became in effect the power behind the throne..."<sup>85</sup>

VI. THE POWER OF THE MINISTER OF DEFENSE

From October 15, 1979 until his resignation on April 16, 1983, General García occupied the top position in the El Salvador Armed Forces, then "the most powerful post in El Salvador."<sup>86</sup> During this time, he directly centralized and consolidated power in his own office and person.

A. The de jure and de facto Power of Command of the Minister of Defense: The Salvadoran Armed Forces were like other military institutions in some respects, especially in the fact that it was extremely hierarchical and soldiers obeyed the commands of their superior officers. The Salvadoran Armed Forces had a formal chain of command headed by the "Alto Mando" or High Command, the highest decision-making body whose most important member was the Minister of Defense and Public Security after the October 1979 coup.<sup>87</sup> Orders were

<sup>87</sup> Previously, the High Command included the president of El Salvador, a military man. With the coup, the two military representatives of the provisional junta formed part of the high command, meaning Cols. Gutierrez and Majano. But as stated above, Gutierrez was marginalized almost immediately due to ill health, and he served as the "front man" of the better-known García. Majano lost his formal command authority in May 1980, as discussed regularly followed and easily communicated within a day, though they were often given verbally followed later by formal direct orders.<sup>88</sup>

Command over both Military and Security Forces: General García had command authority over the entire military and security forces. On the Armed Forces side, this included the Air Force, the Navy and the regular army and its major units: the 1st Infantry Brigade (San Carlos Barracks), 2nd Infantry Brigade (Santa Ana), 3rd Infantry Brigade (San Miguel), Artillery Brigade (San Juan Opico), Mixed Cavalry Regiment (Sitio del Nino), Engineer Battalion and Instruction Center (Zacalucateca), Signal Battalion and Instruction Center (El Zapote Barracks), Special Forces (later including Atlacatl, Arce, and Beloso BIRI battalions), five military detachments, and two frontier detachments.

Authority flowed from the top down and was highly centralized in the office of the Defense Ministry. According to U.S. Brigadier General Woerner, the Commander of the Southern Command who conducted the most thorough early study of the El Salvador Armed Forces, “the concept of delegation of authority is virtually non-existent.”<sup>89</sup> Most significantly, in the army lines of authority and communication flowed through a structure based on commanding one of the fourteen Salvadoran departments, moving directly from the minister of defense <sup>89</sup> One U.S. MilGroup officer put it this way: “You cannot even get a pencil in there without asking the Defense Minister,” Interview in U.S. embassy, 1983. As Woerner said: “There was no institutional tradition to provide for the delegation of authority, even in the realm of normal staff responsibility for making recommendations...” “See Brigadier General Fred Woerner, “Report of the El Salvador Military Strategy Assistance Team ” San Salvador, September 12, 1981, ES02030, p. 208.

straight to one of fourteen department commanders. Thus, the main decision-maker for strategy and operations was Minister of Defense García, and local military commanders were able to take few initiatives without direct authorization from the Minister of Defense.<sup>90</sup>

Minister of Defense Garcia's command authority also included the public security forces – the National Guard, National Police, and Treasury Police – all of whom answered directly to the minister and sub secretary (or vice minister) of defense and had their central headquarters in San Salvador.<sup>91</sup> These different military and security forces were fungible, meaning that officers could rotate between the army and security forces; in other words, they could end up serving the Army at one time and the National Guard, National Police or Treasury Police at another. The Minister of Defense presided over both – “a combined post that puts him in charge not only of the army but also of the country's security apparatus...”<sup>92</sup>

El Salvador's military was governed by the following different laws: the Code of Military Justice, the Constitution, the “Ordenanza” of the Armed Forces and what are called “Organic Laws,” which granted the defense minister extensive powers. By law the Ministry of Defense was the summit organization, especially during periods of state of siege. The defense minister, according to Article 140 of the Ordenanza, was responsible for “the administration of the armed forces.”

The Power to Appoint and Punish: The authority of the defense minister included the power to appoint other officers to key positions and investigate officer behavior. Punishment options available to the defense minister included demotion, transfer or removal from the armed forces as well as referral to trial. In fact, the law required that the minister of defense investigate and punish abuse, especially through Article 73 of the Military Code. Chapter III of the Military Code prohibited acts of violence against persons and suggested punishments of between fifteen to twenty years imprisonment (Article 68)<sup>93</sup>.

<sup>92</sup> The entire quote: “One complicating factor in drawing this distinction [between the army and the security forces] is that Colonel Jose Guillermo García is the country's minister of defense and public security, a combined post that puts him in charge not only of the army but also of the country's security apparatus, including the treasury police.” Ed Walsh, “U.S. Believes Salvadoran Treasury Police Involved in Latest Violence”, Washington Post 12 April 1981:A25.

A procedure for punishment existed, but the minister of defense also had significant discretionary authority. By law the minister of defense was supposed to name a magistrate judge (juez de instrucción) to investigate wrongdoing in the armed forces. He could also appoint a special envoy to carry out these tasks. If not satisfied with the results of an investigation, he could still transfer an officer, change this officer's post, or send the officer out of the country. Only the minister of defense or his vice minister had the authority to fire officers (Article 186). In practice, the minister of defense could pursue these responsibilities through a General Order.

During a state of emergency, which was the case throughout the entire early 1980s, the defense minister had even more power; in practice it was possible for the minister of defense to expel military officers simply on the basis of "not being suitable for military service" ("por no convenir a los servicios"). Officers could also be retired simply for "bad conduct" ("mala conducta"), even without a state of emergency.

B. No civilian control: Several other essential features distinguished the El Salvador military and served to enhance General García's position. First, de facto civilian control of the military did not exist during the entire García period, even though some civilians sat on the provisional government junta and a civilian was nominally appointed as president of the country between 1982-1984. As such, this civil-military junta civilians had some de jure powers to act as president, but in the context of El Salvador in the 1980s, the idea of civilian control of the military was so far-fetched that foreign officials openly referred to the civilian president as an "adornment."<sup>94</sup> Indeed, the longest-serving civilian president (junta president December 1980-

It forcefully noted that the military "will not accept civilian control of their institutions

1982 and president 1984-1989), Jose Napoleon Duarte, could not assume office without agreeing to a formal political pact with Defense Minister García: In exchange for complete military autonomy from civilian authority (including the courts), no interference in the conduct of the war or any other "military business," and Duarte's help in gaining more assistance from the U.S. government, the armed forces would allow Duarte to hold office.<sup>95</sup> Duarte later complained bitterly he "had found nearly impossible any effort to punish or even transfer any officer of whatever rank because the military institution insisted on disciplining its own people as and when it chose."<sup>96</sup> Perhaps most tellingly, even when elections were called for March 1982, the eventual "winner" was imposed in a deal with the military high command and had not even participated as a candidate in the elections; he was the military's banker.<sup>97</sup>

In practice, after the October 1979 coup the minister of defense occupied the position of greatest power and authority. This had not previously been the case since the military president of the country had held the office of greatest power for the previous sixty years "Commander and Chief of the Armed Forces," followed closely by the minister of defense. This command structure is demonstrated in Figure 5. Once the role of president was filled by provisional

<sup>97</sup> Elections were held in 1982 on the insistence of the U.S. But when the winner proved to be Major Roberto D'Aubuisson, a supposedly "cashiered" military officer and one of the leaders of the country's death squads, a deal was negotiated with the military that resulted in the appointment as president of Álvaro Alfredo Magaña Borja, the military's chief banker who had not even been a candidate in the elections. This did not change power arrangements: Earlier, Jose Napoleon Duarte had headed a nominal civil/military junta, but the military high command refused to take orders from this junta. Duarte described in an interview with this writer in San Salvador in late 1982 how the high command of the military called in each party individually to tell them that their own banker would be the new civilian president, and the junta itself would be dismissed. This was also later described in his autobiography. See Duarte: My Story, New York: Putnam and Sons, 1986. juntas after the October 1979 coup and later a civilian president (1982-1984), they should theoretically have assumed this same position and thus been able to give orders to General García, but this was not the case. Instead, the powers formerly held in the presidency as "Commander and Chief of the Armed Force" devolved upon the Minister of Defense, thus enhancing the powers of this position and effectively denying a civilian president the possibility of control over the military.<sup>98</sup>

For a short time, in a formal legal sense only, both Colonel Gutiérrez and Colonel Majano (along with civilians) stood above Defense Minister García in the hierarchy because they represented the military in the civil-military provisional junta and should have possessed the authority of the previous military presidents. But this was not the case. Not only did all provisional juntas and civilian presidents lack command authority, but Colonel Gutiérrez was effectively marginalized by ill health as early as January 1980 and effectively ceded his place to García. Even when he returned, Colonel Gutiérrez was regarded by U.S. intelligence as García's

<sup>98</sup> There is no dispute about the sense of powerlessness over the military among the Salvadorans that served in the two provisional juntas. See my interviews with past junta members and political leaders, including President Jose Napoleon Duarte, Morales Ehrlich, Hector Dada, Guillermo Ungo and Ruben Zamora. President Duarte was especially forthright about his inability to control the military in private, but others spoke for the press. For example: "Another party official said Duarte has made some progress in controlling the military. But when asked to cite an example where Duarte had done something over the opposition of Defense Minister García, that leader said he did not think something like that could ever happen." This group clearly has the military advantage—all key units in the capital are commanded by officers who support García and Carranza."<sup>111</sup>

In sum, Minister of Defense García had both the de jure and/or de facto power and authority to command, develop strategies and tactics for the military, make appointments, <sup>106</sup> This author traveled with D'Áubuisson during his presidential campaign and had several interviews with him in 1983. He self-identified as a fascist in our discussions, especially admiring the Sportpalast or famous "total war" speech delivered by Germany's Propaganda Minister, Joseph Goebbels, in February 1943. In his constant campaigning throughout the countryside, he borrowed heavily from the themes of the speech, especially the need to save the country from reformers who were always "communists in disguise" – even if they did not yet know it."

<sup>108</sup> D'Áubuisson enhanced his terrorist credentials as one of the "intellectual authors" of the assassination of El Salvador's Archbishop Romero. Called a "pathological murderer" by Ambassador Robert White and a "terrorist" by the Directorate of Intelligence of the CIA in a document prepared for then-Vice President George Bush, D'Áubuisson was a hero of the extreme right. He founded the Nationalist Republican Alliance (ARENA), a party "served the interests of the extremist minority," according to CIA intelligence, which he led from 1978 to 1985 and was honorary president until his death in 1992. <sup>109</sup> By this D'Áubuisson meant a vast plan to physically eliminate political enemies and grass roots activists based on the "dirty war" techniques carried out by the military of that country. ## VII. DEFENSE MINISTER GARCÍA CONSOLIDATES POWER AND SANCTIONS STATE TERROR

The manner in which Minister of Defense García immediately consolidated and enhanced his own power in 1980, his first year in this office, is instructive for demonstrating his role in authorizing, assisting and participating in repression. On the one hand, García's actions and inactions supported a highly repressive military apparatus to forcibly contain the threat of civilian mobilization. This included death squads operating out of the headquarters of the military and security forces. On the other hand, he manipulated appointments to produce the calculated defeat of reformists inside the military. These actions and inactions created the conditions for mass murder and institutionalized state terror.

A. García Expanded the Repressive Capacity of the Defense Ministry: García enlarged and centralized the institutional power of the Defense Ministry by placing several essential functions, previously located in the presidency, directly under his control. For example, despite promises to the contrary made at the time of the October 1979 coup, paramilitary organs of repression like ORDEN were merely renamed but not dissolved,<sup>114</sup> and then placed under the authority of the Defense Ministry.<sup>115</sup>

<sup>113</sup> Sean Cronin. "Military statement likely to prolong Salvador conflict". The Irish Times [Dublin, Ireland] 23, March 1981, 7.

<sup>114</sup> The demand by civilian organizations to disband ORDEN, was reinforced by a strong recommendation made in a 1978 report by the Inter-American Commission of Human Rights, but these groups quickly reemerged under military sponsorship as Civil Defense Groups that became active participants, especially in combined operations targeting civilians.

<sup>115</sup> The repressive civil guard, ORDEN, was placed under the control of the Defense Ministry instead and soon reemerged virtually intact but without that name. Note, however, that peasants continued to refer to the Civil Defense paramilitaries as ORDEN throughout the rest of the war, seeing no difference between the two. Also see Christopher Dickey, Salvadoran Junta, Armed Forces Agree to Prosecute To Right-Wing Figures, Washington Post, May 13, 1980.

Military intelligence (formerly called ANSESAL), which was key to directing repression, was also shifted into the Defense Ministry from the presidential palace (with a name change) instead of being dissolved, as promised by the Juventud Militar. A mere four days after the October 1979 coup, Major D'Áubuisson, received authorization from the Defense Ministry at "the highest level" to reorganize ANSESAL under the Army Chief of Staff, where it could be kept out of reach of any civilians (including the new provisional civil-military junta).<sup>116</sup> Intelligence files and networks were initially shifted over to C-2 intelligence section of the joint staff (Estado Mayor Conjunto), though some were moved to Guatemala by D'Aubuisson and used to identify targets for death squads.<sup>117</sup> As Brian Bosch, U.S. military attaché at the time, noted: military intelligence under García increasingly became "more associated with repression, however, than with analytical production."<sup>118</sup>

B. Defense Minister García Condones the Institutionalization of Death Squads
Inside the Military and Security Forces: At the same time, military-led death squads, which had existed previously in a relatively unorganized and decentralized form, were institutionalized and strengthened, especially inside the three security forces. These squads were aimed specifically at the non-combatant population. Their purpose was to undermine any promised political and economic reform, while providing a form of 'deniability'<sup>119</sup> by behaving as if they <sup>116</sup> Major D'Áubuisson told this writer that he had received orders to take the files "from the highest level." He was also told to portray himself as a disgruntled and "cashiered" military officer who was acting on his own. Interview with Roberto D'Áubuisson, San Salvador, September 1983. D'Áubuisson continued to collect a regular salary, though it is not known how long this continued. The idea was to have an "inside-outside" strategy of terror: in this way the military could deny involvement with death squads. Also see "Salvador Death Squads: Deadly Other War," Los Angeles Times, 18 December 1983, in which D'Áubuisson also confessed to reporters that he had drawn up a secret terror plan and had participated in death squad activities.

<sup>117</sup> When the October 1979 Young Officers coup occurred, DAubuisson was given the task of moving ANSESAL files to military offices, but he kept some of these files for himself, most likely on orders from above, which were then flown to Guatemala for safe-keeping. D'Áubuisson subsequently used these files to accuse specific individuals of subversion, generally on television, who were later killed by death squads. See Los Angeles Times December 18, 1983, as well as my interview with the pilot who flew D'Áubuisson's files into Guatemala, San Salvador, November 2009.

were entirely independent and out of the control of the armed forces.<sup>120</sup> During Defense Minister García's tenure, Department Five (Civilian Affairs), a secret intelligence unit established for the surveillance of political targets, was established. It received information from the intelligence sections (S-2) of military and security forces that resulted in the elimination of specific individuals. Testimony presented to the Truth Commission and the U.S. House Committee on Appropriations, respectively, revealed that such plans for elimination were sometimes transmitted as "actual orders to operational units in the various security forces or the armed forces themselves;"<sup>121</sup> these operational units seldom acted independently of the high command.<sup>122</sup>

Death squads were located in Intelligence (S-2) and Operations (S-3) of all three of the security forces (National Police, Treasury Police, and National Guard) where, not coincidentally, Defense Minister García placed his very closest associates and friends as directors. The National Police was directed by the defense minister's "compadre," Carlos Reynaldo Lopez Nuila, whose record of human rights abuses, obstruction and denial is striking.<sup>123</sup> Lopez Nuila, in turn, <sup>120</sup> "Civilian" death squads, which were often privately financed and are not the focus here, did operate in what later became the ARENA Party, founded in 1981 by D'Áubuisson to compete in the 1982 U.S.-sponsored elections. One of the best-known squads operated out of the Constituent Assembly. But even these supposedly autonomous civilian squads, which were not located inside military installations and organizations, depended on military personnel for a variety of activities. The well-known case of Major D'Áubuisson's head of security, Hector Regalado, makes the point. A dentist who turned a Boy Scout troop into a death squad in Santiago de Maria, Regalado had two men defect from his operation who confessed that they used National Guard transport and weapons in their activities and relied on the Army to "clean up" Regalado's Boy Scout problem. When Regalado was arrested at San Luis Finca in May 1980 (see below), he feared that the teenage Boy Scouts he had trained might talk and, deciding to cover his tracks, he ordered their deaths. Members of the Army then gunned down ten boys. See "Death Squad Began as Scout Troop: Salvadorans Detail Extreme Right's Decade of Lethal Operations," Washington Post, August 29, 1988.

<sup>123</sup> Colonel Lopez Nuila was the godfather of the Defense Minister's son, thus demonstrating the closest of relations. While director of the National Police and later Vice Minister, he obstructed the investigations of the murders of four American churchwomen (see Case 3) and two American advisers plus the head of the land reform agency in the Sheraton Hotel. (Case 4). U.S. declassifieds repeatedly show him denying the existence of torture in the National Police, including the case of the Green Cross representative discussed above. Defense Minister García's close friend from San Vicente, Francisco Antonio Moran, was given the command of the Treasury Police. Known as "the worst of the security forces," it participated in death squad activity that was so notorious the entire organization was soon deemed "beyond repair."<sup>126</sup>

The same pattern can be seen in the National Guard, which also had a terrible human rights reputation and was repeatedly investigated by regional and international organizations prior to García's tenure as defense minister.<sup>127</sup> In this most important of the security forces, Defense Minister García placed Colonel Carlos Eugenio Vides Casanova, a hardliner openly against any type of reform at all. The National Guard also had death squads embedded directly inside the Intelligence Unit (referred to at different times as S-2 or G-2), which was headed by then Major Mario Denis Moran. The National Guard was responsible for "the majority of death squad style killings,"<sup>128</sup> including the murders of four American churchwomen (see Case 3) and

The highest levels of military leadership participated in, assisted and supported, or helped to cover-up widespread involvement in military death squad activity. The involvement of senior officers became apparent through the official Press Committee of the Armed Forces publication of a death list on March 29, 1981, which closely replicated an earlier published list by the so-called Secret Anti-Communist Army death squad. The armed forces "COPREFA" list was particularly chilling not only because it mirrored a supposedly "civilian" death squad inventory of human targets but also because it received prominent display next to a photo of Defense Minister García<sup>131</sup> on the front page of El Diario de Hoy, El Salvador's major newspaper. A number of the people named were subsequently murdered or driven into exile, including Rodolfo Viera, the head of the land reform agency murdered in the Sheraton Hotel (Case 4).<sup>132</sup> Defense Minister García's reaction to the death list (while under oath in a U.S. court) is telling. According to this author’s 1983 interviews with Roberto D’Áubuisson, U.S. declassified documents,<sup>134</sup> news stories,<sup>135</sup> and the statements of other officers, García maintained direct contact with Major D’Áubuisson immediately after assuming the position of defense minister and secretly kept him on a military payroll while D’Áubuisson organized death squads inside and outside the military. One colonel said that García, with Vice Minister Carranza, gave authorization and operational instructions to these squads through D’Áubuisson,<sup>136</sup> and another military informant claimed that García lent “suitable men” throughout the country for death squad activity.<sup>137</sup> But regardless of whether these allegations are correct, it stretches credulity that death squads could have freely operated <sup>135</sup> Politically delicate assassinations, like the 1980 murders of the leaders of the Frente Democrático Revolucionario (see Case 2) or the director of the land reform agency in the so-called Sheraton Murders (see Case 4) were reportedly discussed in the Armed Forces Security Council made up of all top officers. <sup>136</sup> Transcript of unpublished interview with Colonel Roberto Eulaio Santivanez, former director of ANSESAL and Roberto D’Áubuisson’s immediate superior from 1977-1979. Also see the CBS interview with Walter Chronkite. Criticized for self-interested motives that convinced him to give interviews to the media, Santivanez’ information has nonetheless proved reliable, especially in its most explosive claims. For example, Santivanez not only charged that former Defense Minister Jose Guillermo García and Colonel Carranza, Vice Minister of Defense and then Director of the Treasury Police, helped organize and operate D’Áubuisson’s death squad network, but he stated that Carranza was on the CIA payroll – a claim that both Carranza and the U.S. government denied during a congressional hearing. But the New York Times confirmed the CIA connection, and even more telling, Carranza later admitted under oath to serving in this capacity in his testimony in a civil trial, Chavez v Carranza.

with impunity from inside all three of the security forces without the knowledge, assistance, protection and the conscious "blind eye" of the Minister of Defense. This is especially the case since either a very close friend or colleague headed each security force.

No claim of lack of knowledge of death squad activity inside the facilities of the security forces is credible. Defense Minister García could hardly have been unaware of military involvement in death squads, especially when the evidence of their work was deliberately and gruesomely displayed around El Salvador to create an atmosphere of terror [see photo 2], and reports of especially gruesome killings filled the news: 18 bodies with their chest carved found on the streets of San Salvador, a mutilated corpse in the parking lot of the best hotels, a young woman with her brains blown out on the floor of the fanciest shopping center of San Salvador, and piles of bodies on the sidewalk.

Evidence consistently pointed to military involvement in these death squads: victims' hands were bound behind their backs with plastic cord in the manner characteristic of the security forces [see photo 3 below], people were seized by men in uniform and handed to men out of uniform (or vice versa), prisoners were routinely exchanged among different forces, safe houses were shared, logistics and equipment were coordinated, and transport was arranged. The U.S. Embassy repeatedly discussed death squads with García and he always denied any connection with the armed forces. But as one U.S. declassified cable stated: García “tolerated the continued existence of death squads and, in January 1981 reneged on promises to limit them.”<sup>140</sup>

These were not simply acts of omission. The Defense Minister used the “murky” existence of death squads to deny the responsibility of the military and security forces for human rights abuses; he rewarded their commanders with promotions and failed to order any investigations of their activities – even when confronted with evidence of culpability, as demonstrated below.

C. General García Manipulated the Appointment Process Inside the Armed Forces to Reinforce the Power of Known Extremists. Building up the repressive power of the military and security forces to defeat both military and civilian reformers also depended on Minister of Defense García’s manipulation of the power of appointment. Time and again, García systematically reinforced the position of the most hard-line officers who favored a military solution to the conflict while gradually marginalizing the central figures from the Young Officers Movement who favored dialogue. This pattern of appointments became immediately apparent not only in the appointment of his cronies as heads of each security force but also in his selection of personnel for the most critical position of Vice Minister of Defense and Public Security. For García’s all-important second in command, Defense Minister García and Gutiérrez chose their former telephone company (ANTEL) colleague,<sup>141</sup> Col. Nicolas Carranza, who was one of the recognized leaders of the extremist right<sup>142</sup> and whose appointment was protested by the Young Officers Movement.<sup>143</sup> These appointments signaled to military officers that ultra-rightists in the would continue to wield full power inside the armed forces.

<sup>141</sup> Carlos Andino Martinez, El Estamento Militar en El Salvador, in Estudio Centroamericanos, October-November 1979 shows that García was President of Antel from march 1974-July 1977, when Vides Casanova and Carranza served as ANTEL deputy directors. Guitierrez was an ANTEL manager, thus these colonels already had a history of working together. Rhey had jointly controlled the national telephone company ANTEL, and had engage in false invoicing and misallocation of fund on the order of $16 to $18 million. Raymond Bonner, Weakness and Deceit. U.S. Policy and El Salvador, Times Books, New York, 1984.

<sup>142</sup> Colonel Carranza was cited by a number of Salvadorean military source as actively involved in death squad activity. He virtually admitted this involvement, saying that the conception of the death squads has been ‘distorted by the international press and enemies of El Salvador like (former US Ambassador to El Salvador) Robert White.’ ‘The first time the death squads appeared,’ the Colonel said, dressed in combat fatigues and outfitted with a 45-automatic pistol and huge knife strapped to his hip, ‘they appeared in Brazil. Those in the death squads were police officials who shot criminals, mostly thieves. There was no law then and no way to put them in jail. Every time the police arrested someone, they were set free, so crimes went unpaid. We, too, found that the justice system did not punish the terrorists here who attacked the population and so we had to take similar measures on our own.’” See Chris Hedges, “Congress weighs aid to Salvador security force’s.” Christian Science Monitor 30 May 1984: 7.

<sup>143</sup> Junior officers disputed Carranza’s appointment, but García and Gutiérrez overruled them from their superior authority. See Brian Bosch, The Salvadoran Officer Corps and the Final Offensive of 1981 (McFarland and Company 1999), 24.

While still talking the language of reform, García's hard-line message was decisively reinforced through a number of other actions. In a meeting between more than 100 officers on December 18, 1979, military leadership was reshuffled to push out reformists and fill their places with officers loyal to García.<sup>144</sup> This meeting, the first step in a virtual "counter-coup" against the Young Officers Movement, spelled the end of military cooperation with any but the most compliant civilians. Later the Permanent Council of the Armed Forces (COPEFA), which had been established by progressive young officers to act as their corporate voice within the military, was marginalized; civilians were told that only the Ministry of Defense was the proper channel of communication between members of the civil-military junta and the armed forces. This ended the pretense that a provisional junta could control the armed forces.

That García shared the hardliners' preference for a military and not a political solution to the conflict in El Salvador was made clear through his immediate use of force to quell demonstrations and confrontations with the left, regardless of promises to do otherwise<sup>145</sup> It was also made clear to civilians in a series of meetings, where the pretext of support for any reform of the military itself was very quickly dropped.<sup>146</sup> When civilian members of the provisional civil-military junta, appalled by the repressive conduct of this "new" military, presented a written ultimatum demanding the resignation of Defense Minister García, the newly-appointed Director General of the National Guard, Col. Vides Casanova, openly threatened the mass killings of

<sup>145</sup> As early as the morning after the coup, conflict developed between the reformers, Guerra and Majano, on one side, and Gutiérrez and García on the other, regarding how the military should respond to attempted armed actions by guerrilla groups and civilian demonstrations. In Mejicanos and Cuscatancingo, for example, García wanted to send troops, but Guerra and Majano opposed this as too provocative. According to both Majano and Guerra, they managed to prevent García from using army troops from the First Brigade, but García proceeded to use security force units to suppress the rebellions. The most hardline majors, including Sigfredo Ochoa and Roberto D'Áubuisson, led the assaults. At least a hundred people were killed, many of them civilians. See Dermot Keogh. 1983. "The Myth of the Liberal Coup: The United States and the 15 October 1979 Coup in El Salvador." Millennium: Journal of International Studies 13:153-183.)

<sup>146</sup> Stanley (1996, 156-7) cites a cabinet official describing several meetings held in December 1979 at which Agriculture and Planning Ministry officials presented plans for land, banking, and commercial reforms to junta and cabinet. Defense Minister García sat silently through the meetings, then asked for time, near the end, to deliver the following message: "All of the shit that you have been discussing is not going to happen. We are not going to permit it." See his interview with a former cabinet member, April 1990.

200,000-300,000 people “if that is what it takes to stop a communist takeover”<sup>147</sup> – an act of intimidation with great effect. Civilian leaders were also told in no uncertain terms who ruled the country: as Col. Vides Casanova put it in a December 27, 1979 meeting: “Col. García is the man from who we take orders, not the junta... We have been running this country for 50 years, and we are quite prepared to keep on running it.”<sup>148</sup>

Almost all civilian representatives quit in protest of the refusal to stop the repressive actions of “the heads of the Ministry of Defense and some of the Commanders of Military offices.”<sup>149</sup> In the first set of resignations (January 1980), two of the three civilian members of the junta publicly cited the growing dominance of ultra-rightist military officers as well as the Salvadoran armed forces’ failure to replace Jose Guillermo García as Defense Minister.<sup>150</sup> They were joined in their protest by 10 of 11 cabinet ministers, all 13 deputy ministers and 12 officials, including Supreme Court magistrates and senior officials. Civilian leaders were clear about where real power lay: Defense Minister García, Vice Minister Carranza and National Guard Director Vides Casanova were the three people “who could stop the repression if they wished,”<sup>151</sup> they told U.S. embassy officials, but instead repression increased to new levels with the killing by the armed forces of demonstrators and trade unionists.<sup>152</sup>

<sup>150</sup> In March, a second set of resignations took place when members of the Christian Democratic Party, who agreed to join the government after these resignations also left. For the full text of the resignations of the January resignations, see Estudios Centroamericanos, January-February 1980, 117. Also see the Miami Herald, January 4, 1980 and January 5, 1980 and New York Times, January 5, 1980.

<sup>151</sup> As one U.S. declassified cable directed to the U.S. Secretary of State, “Conversation with UCS leaders,” dated May 7, 1980, said: “Labor attaché... had heard that local National Guard bore much of the responsibility for repression. The directors agreed but named three officials who, they said, could stop the repression if they wished: Minister of Defense García, Sub-Secretary of Defense Carranza, and Director of the National Guard Vides Casanova.” This opinion was widely shared within the Christian Democratic Party and other parties.

<sup>152</sup> The death toll included a wave of attacks against trade unionists, the killing of at least 21 demonstrators on January 22, 1980, and the indiscriminate killings of at least 54 people participating in a general strike in San Salvador alone. A second effort to form a new junta that included civilian members of the center-left opposition was torpedoed by the murders of the country’s Attorney General and Archbishop in March.

D. Defense Minister García Protected Exremists by Reintegrating Those Awaiting Criminal Prosection and Failing to Investigate Confessed Military Criminals: García also ruled out accountability or punishment of any sort for human rights abuses. Despite his legal obligation to investigate crimes committed by members of the military and security forces, inquiries ordered by the provisional junta into the security forces' record of torture and murder under former General Romero were halted. A Special Investigating Committee (CEI) aimed at investigating torture and disappearances was repeatedly obstructed, resulting in the resignations of the commission members in January 1980.<sup>153</sup> Although the commission had already named officers it recommended for prosecution for criminal offenses against political prisoners, García and other officers refused to investigate or take action against those who had reportedly been responsible for the torture and murder of prisoners.<sup>154</sup> Instead, some of the most repressive military officers dropped from the active duty list after the October 1979 coup returned: in two years some 40 officers, many identified with the greatest repression under President Romero, were brought back and integrated into the command structure.<sup>155</sup>

Defense Minister García also protected those who were caught with damning evidence, including several who confessed to crimes. In the process, he set about defeating reformists inside the military who were the single greatest threat to his authority. This is especially evident in the "San Luis Finca" case in May 1980, the key turning point in the descent to mass state terror. When First Infantry Brigade troops loyal to reformist leader Colonel Majano raided the San Luis farmhouse in order to halt a conspiracy by the extreme right, they captured eleven of the most hard-line military officers (including some of the most notorious human rights abusers running death squads inside intelligence and operations of the security forces) and twelve extreme right-wing civilians. D'Áubuisson and others were caught red-handed with extensive evidence connecting them a vast conspiracy to murders civilians. Captured documents showed the organizational structure, personnel, infrastructure, and weaponry or other equipment used by a large number of military officers and some civilians in an elaborate death squad operation aimed at bringing about "total war;" a framework document spelled out the names and locations of other sympathetic officers willing to help. Other damning documents seized included a notebook containing the payments and plans to assassinate Archbishop Oscar Romero, a document accusing the archbishop of being a communist, and a detailed record of a substantial arsenal, much of which did not form part of the normal military inventory.<sup>156</sup> This included high-velocity rifles, machine guns, shotguns, pistols, silencers, night vision scopes, telescopic sights, bulletproof vests and ski masks.<sup>157</sup> When this "unique treasure trove of evidence" (Colonel Majano's words) was reported to U.S. Secretary of State Ed Muskie by Ambassador White, Secretary Muskie noted that the "materials seized appeared "conclusive as to the guilt of those detained."<sup>158</sup>

The Defense Minister was faced with a clear choice: either García's ally in the 1963 tanda, Major D'Áubuisson, and a number of extremist military officers would have to be investigated, removed from the military and even "tried publicly in impartial proceedings," as arresting officer Colonel Majano insisted and even ordered,<sup>159</sup> or the authority of Majano and his supporters would have to be curtailed. The few civilians still in the junta government supported Majano, especially his call for the restructuring of García's ministry of defense, but took an even <sup>156</sup> Evidence included a notebook belong to Captain Alvaro Saravia, Major D'Áubuisson's head of security, and papers from D'Áubuisson's briefcase, some of which he attempted to eat. D'Áubuisson reportedly tried to eat his notebook as well. See my testimony in Doe v Saravia for a more detailed discussion of this evidence.

<sup>157</sup> Lists of available vehicles, aircraft, military offices and propaganda were also seized. Plans for a coup should reformists take over were also included.

<sup>158</sup> Ambassador White wrote to the State Department: "The Salvadoran military are now presented with evidence they cannot ignore." See "Arrest of Rightist Coup Plotters," Classification Excised, Cable to State Department, May 8, 1980, EL00031.

<sup>159</sup> Ambassador White reported: "Colonel Majano...wants D'Áubuisson and company tried publicly in impartial proceedings that will lead where the abundant evidence of high level complicity takes them. Majano spoke several times of the need to restructure the ministry of defense and at one point he said he trusted neither Cols. García nor Carranza, Minister and Vice Minister of Defense and although he did not insist that either be replaced, it was clear he felt a fair trial of the conspirators could ultimately implicate one or both of these officials." "Breakfast Meeting with Military Members of JRG on Aftermath of D'Áubuisson's Arrest," Secret, Cable San Salvador, 3272, May 9, 1980, EL00669. Majano stated that he gave a direct order to conduct an investigation. Interview, 2003.

tougher stance to the U.S. ambassador, saying that it was “essential that the Minister and Vice-Minister of Defense (García and Carranza) resign and that the conspirators be expelled from the country immediately.”<sup>160</sup>

Defense Minister García’s actions at this crucial moment demonstrate his modus operandi. Due to Colonel Majano’s insistence that an investigation take place and the officers caught be detained and the issuance of a direct order by the majority of the provisional junta, García gave the appearance of fulfilling but no investigation occurred. Instead, García appointed Major Miguel Mendez as investigating judge even though Major Mendez was listed in the captured documents as a contact and supporter of the conspirators, and the Defense Minister limited the charge to “attempted coup.” This meant that evidence on paper regarding the archbishop’s assassination and a huge clandestine conspiracy was never examined by any judge nor investigated. Although some of the detained military officers confessed to a host of illegal activities, including participation in a kidnapping-for-profit ring run out of National Guard Intelligence (S-2), all suspects were immediately released without further investigation. On May 13, 1980, Defense Minister García announced that military judge Major Miguel Mendez had found no evidence to warrant charges.<sup>161</sup>

Defense Minister García still could have retired, transferred or removed extremist officers for ‘mala conducta’ or he could have initiated a second investigation. This did not occur. Instead, he mobilized behind the scenes to prevent the trial of Major D’Áubuisson, “whom he protected as if it was a matter of life and death.”<sup>162</sup> Major Mendez was subsequently promoted while Colonel Majano was relieved of his command. The message was clear: on the same day that 24 extremists were freed, the head of the military reform movement was stripped of his command. The very next day, the military also announced the suspension of agrarian reform.

This victory of the hardliners was fully consolidated through transfers and promotions in September 1980 when García and Gutiérrez exploited their command of the armed forces to issue 'Battle Orders'—the yearly postings and promotions. General Order No. 10 stripped all reformist Majano supporters of every post of significance. These orders completely isolated young officers supportive of reform either by sending them abroad or to installations far from the capital or bribing them through positions more to their liking. A few were killed under suspicious circumstances. Majano himself narrowly escaped an assassination attempt; he was removed from the (now powerless) civil-military junta (December 9, 1980), and eventually arrested (March 1981).<sup>163</sup>

García's decisions in the San Luis Finca case were no mistake. In a May 21, 1980 meeting with Ambassador Robert White, called by the ambassador to insist that state violence be reduced and to warn García that any further military assistance could be jeopardized, the Defense Minister refused to promise to end violence and sought to rehabilitate D'Áubuisson. As Ambassador White cabled to the Department of State, García covered-up for D'Áubuisson:

"This is the most discouraging and disappointing conversation I have had since my arrival in El Salvador. Col. García made no promise, implicit or explicit, to put an end to the official violence... The reality is that the principle threat to stability of this government comes from the officers of the high command who are secretly in the right's corner."<sup>164</sup>

VIII. DEFENSE MINISTER GARCÍA'S 'GREEN LIGHT' FOR TERROR: NO INVESTIGATIONS, NO PUNISHMENT, BUT PROTECTION AND PROMOTION

General García's protection from effective investigation and prosecution of the military extremists caught at San Luis Finca and his subsequent failure to use his authority to demote, disperse, transfer or fire these extremists gave the "green light" for mass state terror. García's actions gave an unmistakable signal from the very top that repression could be raised to a new level — without fear of consequences. These military extremists were returned to their former positions of authority and, later, García promoted many of them to higher rank. Not surprisingly, they went on to commit some of the most egregious human rights crimes of the civil war. As

<sup>163</sup> García left Majano temporarily in the civil-military junta to keep his supporters from open rebellion and to placate the U.S. Ambassador. In November, the reform leader narrowly escaped death directly outside the Estado Mayor, when a bomb intended to explode beneath his car missed. Later, García issued a warrant for Majano's arrest.

<sup>164</sup> Ambassador White added: It was obvious that he would like nothing better than to drive Colonel Majano out of the junta and rehabilitate D'Áubuisson. "Call on Minister of Defense," Confidential Cable 3598, May 21, 1980, EL00670.

Table I illustrates,<sup>165</sup> the crimes committed by this sample group of "San Luis Finca" officers alone included some of the most notorious of the entire civil war: the murders of six leaders of the civilian opposition (see Case 2: FDR murders), the rape and murder of three American nuns and a lay churchwoman (Case 3: Churchwomen), the assassination of the head of the land reform agency and his two American advisers (Case 4: Sheraton murders), and countless massacres (see especially Case 1: Rio Sumpul and Case 5: El Mozote).

(Table is appended at the end of testimony)

After being released, this group assumed (or re-assumed) some of the most important positions in the military and security forces, especially in the intelligence and operations sections of the security forces. [See Table 1]. This permitted the murderous activity they had previously organized and fomented to move with them as their own positions changed within the military, both across the territory and through different units of the armed forces. Thus, death squad activities, once largely confined to the security forces, migrated into the army, especially the Infantry of Engineers in Zacatecoluca and Military Detachment 1 in Chalatenango, where some of the earliest squads were located.<sup>166</sup> Major Denis Moran, for example, went from organizing assassinations in S-2 of the National Guard in San Salvador to doing the same in Zacalucateca, and he received a promotion. Instead of being given even the most minimal sanctions within the authority of Defense Minister García, e.g., forced out of the military, retired for “bad conduct,” (mala conducta) or found “not suitable for military service (por no convenir a los servicios”), members of this group alone went on to assassinate, torture, plant bombs, commit massacres, kidnap for profit, and traffic in drugs.

---

<sup>165</sup> Because the files of the Salvadoran military are believed to be destroyed, it is especially difficult to track promotions, appointments and subsequent actions. The sources for this table are intelligence and defense documents from the U.S. The table names each officer and lists his rank at the time of their arrest. Abuses are culled from human rights records as well as declassified documents. Where cells are left blank, no information about prior records could be found.

Defense Minister García’s protection of human rights abusers continued until after he left his position in 1983—even in the face of U.S. pressure to act differently.<sup>167</sup> Despite repeated demands for the removal of Treasury Police Director Col. Francisco “Paco” Moran for his brutality, for example, García protected his old school friend as well as the second in command, Major Ricardo Pozo, a known torturer. Because Defense Minister García kept this protection even after Moran’s troops committed a massacre at Soyapango,<sup>168</sup> new embassy officials brought in after the Reagan electoral victory, were initially confused by this behavior. When one informant told the Embassy in San Salvador that “‘one word’ from the Defense Minister and Moran would go,” the embassy official wrote: “Why that word wasn’t said was a mystery...There might be a tie between García and Moran that prevented the former from ousting the latter.”<sup>169</sup>

Impunity for extremists signaled the acceptability of fighting a “dirty war” against civilian non-combatants, especially peasants. The newly freed D’Áubuisson was triumphant. In a May 25, 1980 open letter to the High Command, written immediately after his release, D’Áubuisson urged General García and other senior officers to develop an anti-communist campaign of mass assassination like that used in the dirty wars in Guatemala or Argentina. “That would not signify any embarrassment for you,” he wrote, “because we don’t plan to leave any tracks.”<sup>170</sup>

<sup>167</sup> For example, when the U.S. supported the demands of the Christian Democratic Party to remove Colonel Carranza from his position as vice minister of defense, the Defense Minister transferred him to the telephone company ANTEL, an especially plum post for both its intelligence and profit-making possibilities; this meant the next defense minister could later return him later to head the Treasury Police, where he protected fellow torturers. Brought to Treasury after García’s resignation, Carranza was caught covering up the torture committed by his subordinate, Ricardo Pozo, and he was removed as a result of the direct request of President Reagan in a secret letter delivered by Vice President Bush to the new defense minister.

<sup>168</sup> Between 23-30 people were killed in this outskirts area of San Salvador by the Treasury Police. One very high level U.S. informant noted that Moran’s explanation of the massacre would be “believed only by an idiot.” “[Deleted] On the The Soyapango Massacre,” Confidential, Cable, April 11, 1981, EL00713.

But tracks were left in urban areas, where terror was harder to hide. The massacre at National University on June 26, 1980 in the city of San Salvador was impossible to cover-up. The massacre was filmed by two journalists whose footage includes the murder of an unarmed high school student (approximately age 15), who was shot at point blank range while lying on the floor and pleading for his life [See photos 4 and 5]. The journalists captured on camera and video how these students were brought down from the second floor, forced to lie down and, when they became hysterical, a policeman shot one of the boys in the back of the head. Other notorious acts followed: The country’s leading left opposition politicians from the FDR were abducted, tortured and killed in broad daylight with evident involvement of the security forces, (Case 2: FDR murders); nuns and lay people were raped and murdered (Case 3: American Churchwomen) and land reformers, beneficiaries and their advisers were targeted and murdered, even if they were U.S. citizens. in 1981 in San Salvador, death squads (both military and civilian) beheaded more than 70 people – a new tactic that not only stole life but also identity.

Yet nothing was like the countryside. A mere week after the release of San Luis Finca extremists, the first very large massacre of peasants occurred. (Case 1: The Rio Sumpul Massacre). Massacre after massacre of unarmed civilians followed. Appendix III, which is only a partial list, documents 58 mass killings. In San Francisco Guajoyo, for example, security forces, reading from a predetermined list, dragged people from their homes and took them to a farm where they were summarily executed; one was a mentally handicapped young boy. In El Junquillo, 52 people were killed, 32 of them from the same family. At Rio Metayate, soldiers left at least 28 bodies under the suspension bridge, including a 12-year old girl that had been raped. The army killed twenty-four members of the Las Lalas soccer team. At La Quesera, where somewhere between 500-1000 people died, women and children were forced to kneel to face executions – the same tactic used at El Mozote. A number of children were forcibly abducted and “disappeared;” their families still search for them thirty years later. Salvador García, a survivor of the La Quesera massacre, observed small children being tossed from military helicopters out over the Lempa River. He later found his daughter’s body in a tree after she was thrown from a helicopter.<sup>173</sup> At El Calabozo where more than 200 non-combatants died, a woman testified: “They hunted us like animals.”<sup>174</sup>

“The concept of repression is relative,” Defense Minister García argued to reporters,<sup>175</sup> and in certain respects he was correct. What changed from mid-May 1980 was the scale of repression, most especially the dramatic increase of widespread rural massacres. The Defense

<sup>173</sup> The abduction and enforced disappearance of children during counterinsurgency operations was also a regular practice, with most of the disappearances of minors occurring during General García’s tenure as Minister of Defense. The practice of removing children from their villages was a deliberate policy of the High Command, especially after top commanders came to understand that their troops became especially demoralized when ordered to kill children. The majority were falsely labeled as “orphans” without family and sent to “fattening up” centers, then later placed with families, especially in the U.S. These adoptions took place through poorly regulated agencies that charged as much as $20,000 per child. Minister was open about his aims; "Where there is no order, you try to put order. The reaction has to be strong."<sup>176</sup> As Figure 7 below shows, it was strong indeed.

Defense Minister Garica consistently denied that the extreme right was a threat<sup>177</sup> or that the military was connected with rightist terrorism<sup>178</sup> and instead portrayed himself to the U.S. as the only viable alternative to the far right in the armed forces. One new U.S. embassy official, grappling with the actions of a "moderate" ally that did not fit this portrayal, attempted to minimize the extent of García's power to curb abuses, "If García issued a hard and fast order tomorrow absolutely outlawing such incidents," he wrote, "they would only go down by 50 percent at most."<sup>179</sup> But had the Defense Minister ever issued such an order -- which he did not - thousands of lives would have been saved.

<sup>177</sup> As General Woerner states in his study: Our "team was unable to persuade the Armed Force General Staff to identify specifically extreme rightist terrorism as a threat...Unabated terror from the right and continued tolerance of institutional violence could dangerously erode popular support to the point where in the Armed Force would be viewed not as a protector of society, but as an Army of occupation. Pattern of Massacre Deaths during Garcia's Tenure

IX. ASSISTING REPRESSION THROUGH DENIABILITY, COVER-UPS AND THE FAILURE TO INVESTIGATE

Instead, Defense Minister García developed a pattern of dissembling, delay, and obstruction. This was particularly so after the U.S. Congress began a strong fight to cut off military aid to El Salvador in protest against the ongoing human rights violations of the military and security forces. Aimed at placating growing external opposition to providing U.S. aid to the Salvadoran armed forces, Defense Minister García engaged in a classic pattern of deniability, that is, a mode of behavior characteristic of human rights abusers when they understand their actions would be repudiated and even sanctioned if they were fully known.<sup>180</sup> In El Salvador, such deniability stood in sharp contrast to the acts of terror on the ground.

General García is a model of deniability. Reports of conversations involving U.S. officials in early cables demonstrate his and other officers' palpable disdain for the rights and protection of unarmed civilians -- coupled with an initial lack of understanding that the ministers were supposed to hide these attitudes from U.S. officials. But when it became clear that the U.S. Congress was threatening to cut off assistance, García began denying that human rights violations occurred at all or, when this simply did not fly, that he had no knowledge of such violations. Only in extreme cases, when confronted with irrefutable evidence by U.S. officials, would he order an "investigation," but even this was an effort to sustain the impunity of officers.

This pattern of deniability especially characterized Minister García's response to reported massacres because most were rural and thus difficult to verify -- even for especially intrepid reporters or human rights workers whose activities were blocked, sometimes through explicit threats and murders, by the military.<sup>181</sup> Almost all civilian massacres that are known today were initially covered up. The practice of the armed forces was to deny the occurrence of any abuse, next blame it on the guerrilla forces of the FMLN, and finally issue threats. In almost every case, officers could rest assured that fear guaranteed silence and their denials would not be challenged. For example, when soldiers senselessly killed members of the Las Lajas soccer team, local commanders first denied this had occurred even after the Salvadoran Human Rights

<sup>180</sup> This pattern is characterized by: 1) an initial refusal to accept human rights norms; 2) systematic denial that violations actually occur; 3) blaming other actors when violations can no longer be denied; 4) minimizing the gravity and extent of violations; 4) and, finally, making the most minimal changes but only under extensive pressure. See Terry Lynn Karl, "U.S. Foreign Policy, Deniability and the Political 'Utility' of State Terror: The Case of EL Salvador", in Marjorie Cohen, ed. The United States Confronts Torture New York University Press, 2011. Brenner Journal of Interamerican Studies and World Affairs, Vol. 42, No. 4, Special Issue: Globalization and Democratization in Guatemala (Winter, 2000), pp. 127-131.

<sup>181</sup> It was especially difficult to conduct investigative research in the countryside, which this author knows from personal experience. More U.S. reporters died in El Salvador than in any previous conflict, including Vietnam. Reporters were continuously harassed, threatened and killed. The first U.S. journalist, John Sullivan, was "disappeared," at the end of 1980; only his clothes and cameras were found in his hotel room. Later, three well-known photographers were injured in a bombing. Newsweek's photographer was killed in a highly suspicious "skirmish," and numerous journalists died under mysterious circumstances while "caught in cross-fire." In March 1982, a death squad issued a hit list of 35 correspondents' those specifically named included the U.S. embassy's press officer as well as reporters from the New York Times, Washington Post, Miami Herald, Associated Press and UPI. See Milwaukee Journal, March 18, 1982.

Commission collected testimonies of the case. Instead, the Commission itself was then threatened and accused of aiding attempts to discredit the Salvadoran military.<sup>182</sup> The army told family members attempting to retrieve the bodies of the soccer players that they could not have them for burial "because it might defame the army." "If you try to do this," the families were told, "you will be killed like pigs."<sup>183</sup>

The Defense Minister set the example from the top for such denials. In the May 1980, Rio Sumpul massacre (Case 1), for example, where up to 600 unarmed peasants may have died, General García denied that the massacre occurred for as long as possible, even though 19 different forces were involved and reports were easily accessible.<sup>184</sup> He finally admitted a year later that "there have been dead in that area, but not in such 'industrial quantities.'"<sup>185</sup> In the May 29, 1980 massacre at San Francisco Guajoyo, the Minister of Defense denied that security forces had been involved in the murder of peasants taking part in the land reform, even though witnesses identified the National Guard.<sup>186</sup> In the April 7, 1981 Soyapango massacre, the Defense Ministry reported a skirmish when guerrillas fired upon an army patrol, even though the U.S. Embassy countered the Defense Ministry's denials of a premeditated massacre as "not credible."<sup>187</sup> In the massacre of El Mozote (Case 5), where approximately 1000 unarmed

"Detailed Evidence of Government Violence Against Non-Guerilla Elements," [Soyapango and Armenia Massacres; Churchwomen Murders and FDR Leaders Murders], Confidential, Internal Paper, Excised Copy, August 1, 1982, ES01912. Note that blaming combat or the guerrillas themselves was a common practice. In the August 22, 1982 massacre at El Calabozo, General García announced that 47 "subversives" had been killed, but instead villagers described a massacre of approximately 300 unarmed people.

villagers died, General García claimed that the accounts of the massacre were part of a guerrilla campaign to block aid from the U.S. and denied knowledge of any military action.<sup>188</sup> Despite the fact that these events were reported in both the New York Times and the Washington Post and that there was an eyewitness account of the massacre, García vehemently repeatedly denied that any massacre had taken place. "I will deny it and prove it was a fabrication," he told the U.S. ambassador.<sup>189</sup>

These lies were unconvincing to members of Congress and visiting delegations from the U.S. In one highly unusual press conference for a visiting official, Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) voiced his open disbelief of General García following their meeting, eschewing diplomatic niceties.

Leahy: "We have talked to Gen. García several times, about some of the massacres that are reported, whether it's Soyopango last April or San Antonio Abad, or El Mozote or whatever, you can go down the list, and his response has virtually always been a categorical no, that it didn't happen."

Reporter: "When you raised some of these, or other human-rights violations his morning, what was his response?"

Leahy: "I found his answers totally unsatisfactory, I might as well be honest with you."<sup>190</sup>

Minister García's denials regarding the use of torture were met with open incredulity. When Defense Minister García insisted to Patricia Darian (U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs from 1977 to 1981) and other members of a delegation "torture has been eliminated from our system," the delegation had just returned from visiting the women's prison at Ilopango and seen scars from torture on women's bodies. The delegation delivered a letter to the Defense Minister charging: "Salvadoran citizens are tortured in secret rooms."<sup>191</sup> But the dilemma of confronting the top officers of the military with evidence of the torture they repeatedly denied was evident to U.S. officials. When the story of a brutal torture was leaked to the international press, creating difficulties in relations between the ESAF and the U.S. Embassy, Ambassador Hinton warned the State Department: "In the worst of circumstances, the more recalcitrant members of the security forces will come to the conclusion that "dead men tell no tales." If this is the moral of the story for them, more prisoners will die in detention."<sup>192</sup>

There is no record of any investigation of torture conducted by Defense Minister García. Apparently, from his own testimony, García did not see the need to do so. He stated under oath that he had never inspected cells that were used to torture prisoners. When asked specifically about the existence of torture cells in the National Guard, he testified that he did not know and could not say whether or not these cells existed. Finally, when asked whether or not he had questioned the National Guard: "Are you torturing people here in cells in these buildings?" General García answered: "I didn't need to ask that question because it was – I was absolutely sure that that was not happening."<sup>193</sup>

The Defense Minister also did not investigate massacres, even though El Salvador's Military Code required this. Of the 58 massacres of non-combatants documented in Appendix III, not a single one was ever investigated when General García was Minister of Defense. Only the February 22, 1983 Las Hojas massacre, where more than 80 indigenous people from the National Indigenous Association were tied up and shot at close range by soldiers, had even a sham attempt – and this was solely due to U.S. pressure. After reporters had discovered the massacre, Ambassador Hinton urged Minister of Defense García to conduct an investigation<sup>194</sup> and even provided the Defense Minister with the name of the commanding officer, Colonel Elmer Gonzalez Araujo (who had been released earlier by García after the San Luis Finca arrest). Gonzalez Araujo, U.S. intelligence claimed, had ordered Captain Figueroa Morales to kill the people on a list of names he provided.<sup>195</sup> After the U.S. took the unusual step of withdrawing

<sup>195</sup> The embassy had detailed information from two soldiers who were "extremely upset over their participation in the massacre and wanted to desert from the armed forces but were afraid to do so, however, as they believe reprisals would be inflicted on their families by the military." The soldiers reported that a villager was tortured until he drew military advisers from the area, Minister of Defense García promised indigenous leaders that “justice would be thoroughly carried out.”<sup>196</sup> The investigation eventually begun was headed by Colonel “Chato” Alvarado (one of the conspirators from San Luis Finca and a close colleague of the commander charged) who determined, contrary to all evidence, that the Las Hojas deaths had occurred in a military clash. Even this fraudulent investigation was not started until after President Reagan made an extraordinary personal call to the Salvadoran president, warning that future congressional support for aid could not be sustained unless the following conditions were met: “the perpetrators of the Las Hojas killings are detained and charged,” ... “those responsible for killing La Florida cooperative peasants [are] charged and tried,” ... “the churchwomen’s case must go to trial without further legal delay,” ... “those responsible for the Sheraton murders are arrested and prosecution of this case begun.”... and the International Commission of the Red Cross is granted “the right to make unannounced visits to all prisoners and detention centers.”<sup>197</sup>

Yet despite President Reagan’s direct intervention, no officer was ever held accountable for Las Hojas or any other massacre.<sup>198</sup> No evidence can be found of any investigation of massacres at all within the military – with the sole exception of sham inquiries in cases involving the murders of U.S. citizens or conducted under exceptionally strong external pressure. Indeed, until forensic digs began in 1992, García’s denials continued to be believed by some. It took the uncovering by the first forensic team at El Mozote of the bodies of 131 children under the age of 12 to shatter such denials. As the Truth Commission wrote: “Those small skeletons are proof not only of the existence of the cold-blooded massacre at El Mozote but also of the collusion of

<sup>198</sup> Minister Garcia resigned shortly after President Reagan’s call. Although a presiding judge was appointed, both he and all witnesses were terrified, saying that authorities had threatened “to cut out their tongues if they say anything. Instead of arresting the officers that witnesses initially had identified, the treasurer of the indigenous organization whose son was among the victims, was put behind bars. senior commanders of the armed forces, for they show that the evidence of the unburied bodies was there for a long time for anyone who wanted to investigate the facts.”<sup>199</sup>

Given this pattern, it is not surprising that General García eventually lost the trust of U.S. officials from both the Carter and Reagan administrations. Over time, the insistence that any report of abuse was due to “Marxist disinformation” lost its credibility.<sup>200</sup> Referring to his conversations with Defense Minister García in particular, U.S. Ambassador White originally pointed out and subsequent ambassadors would discover: there is “something of an Alice in Wonderland air to conversations with top military officers here...There is almost no way to break through the pose García and company have adopted.”<sup>201</sup>

X. ILLUSTRATIVE CASES:

Specific cases give a more in-depth sense of the manner in which Minister of Defense García authorize, assisted or otherwise participated in the commission of human rights abuses described above. These cases are discussed in chronological order. Note that cases 3 and 4 should be read as “best case scenarios;” investigation ultimately proceeded the farthest because the victims were U.S. and not Salvadoran citizens.

On May 14, 1980, combined units of Military Detachment No. 1, the National Guard and the paramilitary Organización Nacional Democrática (ORDEN), backed by the Salvadoran air force, deliberately killed at least 300<sup>202</sup> and as many as 600 non-combatants,<sup>203</sup> including women and children trying to flee to Honduras across the Sumpul River beside the hamlet of Las Aradas, Department of Chalatenango. Occurring within one week after the release of the San Luis Finca “total war” plotters, this massacre was unparalleled in recent Salvadoran history. Peasants were fired upon for more than nine hours.

Villagers and refugees, running from ESAF artillery and fire from two helicopters, were met by Honduran forces on the opposite bank who pushed them back across the river. When the refugees tried to continue the crossing into Honduras, Salvadoran units opened fire, killing at minimum 300 people. Father Earl “Beto” Gallagher, a Capuchin priest who witnessed both the Rio Sumpul and Rio Lempa massacres, claimed that there was no possibility the military shooting from helicopters could have mistaken refugees at the river for guerrillas. “It would be really tough because they were all women and children. The sound of screaming people would certainly be enough.”<sup>204</sup> As the helicopters fired on the refugee crowd at the banks of the river, the military started shooting mortars. Other witnesses reported people being “scattered like cattle;” one child survivor vividly remembers the death of his mother.<sup>205</sup> Military units reportedly grabbed some of the children remaining on the Salvadoran banks of the river and threatened to toss them into the water if the refugees did not return from Honduras to El Salvador, where they faced certain death.<sup>206</sup> Witnesses also claim that members of ORDEN, which was supposed to have been disbanded, threw babies and children into the air, “slashing them with machetes, cutting off their heads, and slitting them in two”. One of the soldiers was quoted as saying, “We are killing the children of subversion.”<sup>207</sup>

In the preceding months before this massacre, many refugees had settled in the area because this was part of a region along the Honduran-Salvadoran border that had been demilitarized since the “Soccer War” in 1970 and thus considered relatively safe.<sup>208</sup> But the military believed that the demilitarized zone and Honduran territory were serving as a base of operations and refuge for what later became the FMLN guerrilla army. Even if this were not the case, officers considered peasants as legitimate targets in this zone because many belonged to the Federación de Trabajadores del Campo, which supported agrarian reform.

Within a few days, reports of a major massacre began to surface in Honduras, where the massacre received extensive media coverage.<sup>209</sup> Priests and nuns from the Honduran diocese of Santa Rosa de Copán filed a formal complaint about the massacre on 19 June 1980, signed by the dioceses 38 pastoral workers. The entire Honduran Conference of Bishops, headed by the Archbishop of Tegucigalpa, Monsignor Héctor E. Santos, endorsed this accusation in a statement published by the press on 1 July 1980. From El Salvador, the Archdiocese of San Salvador endorsed and associated itself with the Honduran complaint in a communiqué published on 29 June 1980.<sup>210</sup>

<sup>209</sup> The first news report was transmitted on 21 May by a morning news programme on Radio Noticias del Continente, which operates out of Costa Rica. A few days later, the newspaper Tiempo published an interview with Father Roberto Yalaga, a priest in the diocese of Santa Rosa de Copán, who confirmed that at least 325 Salvadorans had been killed by the army and that a Honduran military detachment had cordoned off the bank of the Sumpul river. Two foreign journalists, Gabriel Sanhuesa and Ursula Ferdinand, managed to get to Las Aradas from the Honduran side and obtain visual evidence of the massacre. They also managed to interview a number of survivors who had taken refuge in Honduran border villages. They published a leaflet on the incident.

<sup>210</sup> The complaint was based on the visual evidence and the testimony gathered by the diocese as part of its investigations. The complaint accused the Government and the armed forces of the Republic of Honduras of Minister of Defense García must have known and approved of an operation of this magnitude. Not only did the massacre involve combined Salvadoran forces, which was the purview of the military High Command, but it also depended upon the cooperation of the Honduran Armed Forces, El Salvador's traditional enemy, to prevent Salvadoran villagers from landing on the other side. Indeed, on May 5, nine days before the massacre, Honduran and Salvadoran military leaders met on the border to work out a way of preventing Salvadoran guerrillas from entering Honduras. This meeting, which took place between these traditional rivals, could not have taken place without the approval of the highest commanders of the Salvadoran military, especially the Minister of Defense. This kind of coordinated operation between different forces and across two countries would have required General García's approval, if only to avoid an accidental or unintended outbreak of armed conflict between the Salvadoran and Honduran Armed Forces.

Minister of Defense of El Salvador, General José Guillermo García, denied that the massacre had occurred.<sup>211</sup> Despite the extensive pre-planning, huge number of civilian dead, numerous reports in both the Spanish and English language press throughout Central America and in the U.S.,<sup>212</sup> easily accessible witness statements,<sup>213</sup> and open protests in the Costa Rican embassy of El Salvador by massacre survivors,<sup>214</sup> he insisted that there had been no massacre. No investigation of the massacre was ever held during García's tenure as minister of defense. General García also took no steps to prevent the repetition of such acts, with the result that the same units were used in other operations and followed the same procedures. Thus similar massacres repeatedly took place at the border, for example, two more at Rio Sumpul, several massacres at Rio Lempa, and the massacres associated with "La Guinda de Mayo" in 1982,

Case 2. FDR KILLINGS:

Minister of Defense García Indicated "Satisfaction" with the Murders of Six Opposition Leaders, Denied Military Participation, and Failed to Investigate Security Force Involvement in the Operation Resulting in the Capture, Torture, and Assassination of the Leaders of the Frente Democrático Revolucionario (November 27, 1980)

On 27 November 1980, Enrique Alvarez Córdoba, Juan Chacón, Enrique Escobar Barrera, ✓
Manuel de Jesús Franco Ramirez, Humberto Mendoza and Doroteo Hernández, all of whom were top political leaders of the civilian opposition Frente Democrático Revolucionario (FDR), were abducted, tortured and executed in San Salvador. Enrique Alvarez Córdoba had also been a member of the provisional government, and the first (and perhaps only) member of one of the leading 14 families to openly favor land reform.

The abduction and murders of these noted political leaders were especially brazen. The six victims were taken from the Colegio San José, a Jesuit School Society in the very heart of the capital city, San Salvador, between 9.30 a.m. and 11 a.m. Educational centers, a number of hospitals and the former United States Embassy, which at the time was under heavy guard, were located next to or near the school. The operation was carried out during the morning by a large number of heavily armed men, who carried machine guns, G3 rifles (the standard weapon of the security forces) and radios.<sup>216</sup> The mutilated bodies of the FDR leaders were subsequently found dumped in plain view along the outskirts of the resort city of Apulo.

<sup>216</sup> The FDR leaders were Enrique Alvarez Córdoba, Juan Chacón, Enrique Escobar Barrera, Manuel de Jesús Franco Ramirez, Humberto Mendoza, and Doroteo Hernández. See United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, From Madness to Hope: The 12 Year War in El Salvador, U.N. Doc S/25500 (March, 1993)

Even though these assassinations outraged the public and evidence immediately pointed to the participation of at least one of the security forces, the Minister of Defense conducted no serious investigation of the murders. There were no autopsies; the site where the bodies were dumped was never thoroughly examined; almost all witnesses were never interviewed; and the report of the National Police was buried.<sup>217</sup>

The lack of investigation stood in the face of evidence that indicated the involvement of the security forces. The time and place of the abductions, the number of personnel, the radio equipment, vehicles, weapons and uniforms used, the slang and the chain of command, the fact that the participants withdrew without any problem, the presence of troops blocking the exits so that no one could escape, and the absence of a proper investigation – all of these factors pointed to the security forces.<sup>218</sup> A mere 24 hours after the murders, the U.S. Embassy reported that the evidence of security forces participation involvement was “overwhelming.”<sup>219</sup> Salvadoran civilian leaders agreed.<sup>220</sup> The direct involvement of the security forces was also highlighted by the CIA, which reported National Police officials boasting about committing the assassinations. It further noted: “While National Police personnel probably aided in the assassinations, the operation almost certainly contained elements of other security forces.”<sup>221</sup> Then U.S. Assistant Secretary Patricia Darian confirmed: “there is no doubt that last Thursday’s killing of the FDR leadership was done by the security forces...”

While the killings were almost certainly committed by mid-level officers (perhaps with the advance approval of senior officers in the High Command), the fact remains that the security forces were responsible and that after the event the High

The FDR murders were a combined operation of the security forces. As the Truth Commission put it:

The Commission has substantial evidence that the Treasury Police carried out the security operation on the schools perimeter... Other information received by the Commission concerning the activities of the security and intelligence forces indicates that the National Guard also carried out the operation, acting independently of the General Staff. As indicated earlier, the Commission cannot, in any case, accept the idea that the operation was carried out without the cooperation of senior commanders of one or more security forces, which at the time were headed by military officers.<sup>223</sup>

Nonetheless, Minister of Defense García publicly denied that the security forces could have been involved and never ordered an investigation of these killings.<sup>224</sup> An investigation would have been easy because the intelligence services of the Salvadoran Armed Forces had to have known what forces were involved in the murder. Additionally, National Guard Director Vides Casanova admitted to the U.S. Secretary of State that the Colegio San José where the leaders were seized, housed the human rights organization Socorro Jurídico, and was therefore under constant surveillance by the Salvadoran security forces.<sup>225</sup> Still, no investigation occurred <sup>224</sup> Defense Minister García said in a phone interview that no uniformed members of any security forces took part in the operation that killed six leaders of the FDR. even though intelligence information about the perpetrators of this act was available. Instead, General García consistently denied the participation of his forces.

No such deniability operated inside the Salvadoran Armed Forces. A mere three days later, in an internal meeting with military officers, Defense Minister Garcia and Vice Minister of Defense Carranza privately indicated their certainty that the security forces were involved. Both also signified their approval of these assassinations and others like them in the future. As one declassified CIA document reported:

These officers believe that other leaders and members of the FDR should be eliminated in a similar fashion wherever possible. These feelings were expressed by several middle-level army officers on 28 November 1980 in the presence of Col. Jose Garcia Merino, Minister of Defense, and Nicholas Carranza, Sub-Minister of Defense, and both Garcia and Carranza indicated that they supported this line of thinking. From the comments of all those present during this conversation, it was clear that Garcia, Carranza, and the other army officers present accepted as a fact that the military services were responsible for the assassination of the six FDR leaders<sup>226</sup> [emphasis added].

The murders of the FDR leaders had an enormous political impact, definitively closing the door to negotiations and strengthening the military officers pushing for “total war” and outright military victory – the position of General García.<sup>227</sup>

Three nuns -- Sisters Ita Ford, Maura Clarke, Dorothy Kazel -- and a lay missionary, Jean Donovan, were taken to an isolated spot where they were raped and executed.<sup>228</sup>

The arrests of the churchwomen had been planned in advance, and these nuns had been repeatedly threatened.<sup>229</sup> After National Guard members detained them at a checkpoint, National Guard Deputy Sergeant Luis Antonio Colindres, told the other guardsmen to wait while he returned to his post near the airport. When he returned to the location where the churchwomen were being detained, Colindres told his men that he had been given superior orders to kill the captured women.<sup>230</sup> The next morning, December 3, the churchwomen's partially clad bodies were found. They had been sexually assaulted prior to being shot to death at close range.<sup>231</sup>

U.S. Ambassador White identified the women as their bodies were pulled from the dirt, while U.S. Embassy Military Group Commander Cummings immediately informed Defense Minister García of the murders. <sup>234</sup> The Political Officer of the Embassy reported that the Commander of the area, Colonel Casanova Vejar had contradicted the Justice of the Peace and “ was extremely reluctant to talk about the incident.” He also noted that two National Guardsmen had ordered a group of villagers to dig a grave for the women, and this was known immediately. Over the next three and a half years as defense minister, General García would persistently talk of his commitment to get to the bottom of these slayings.<sup>237</sup> But when stonewalling did not work, Defense Minister García was forced to name a high level commission to “find the guilty people and punish them.” The three military members of the four-person commission included two close friends and colleagues of Defense Minister García as well as a first cousin of the Police Chief Lopez Nuila, who was General García’s “compadre.” After holding back fingerprints which would have identified the parties responsible, the commission quickly ruled out any role of the security forces.<sup>238</sup> A second investigation, conducted by the National Guard, also took place at U.S. insistence, but it too proved to be a complete sham.<sup>239</sup>

Only intense pressure by the U.S. government resulted in any progress at all. The especially shocking nature of this crime led to the appointment of a special U.S. investigative mission, the “Rogers-Bowdler” mission, which quickly concluded that the churchwomen’s murders also involved a cover-up and urged the FBI to enter the investigation.<sup>240</sup> But it took a

The second, led by Major Zepeda, reported that there was no evidence that members of the National Guard had executed the churchwomen. But testimony states that Major Zepeda personally took charge of covering up for the murderers by ordering the National Guard members to hide their rifles so they could not to be detected and to suppress the facts if questioned. personal communication from Secretary of State Haig informing the Salvadoran government that a resolution of this case (and that of the Sheraton murders described below) was “critical” for the continuation of a U.S. role in El Salvador, to move events forward. As the Secretary Haig communicated to General García and President Duarte:

The investigation of the murders...will be presented as a major issue in Congress’s consideration of or assistance for this year and next. In the end, Defense Minister García and his subordinate, Col. even with the insistent private statements of the guardsmen that they had received orders to kill the churchwomen from "higher up" and had been guaranteed protection.<sup>246</sup> The reason became clear in the most thorough investigation to that date by U.S. Judge Harold R. Tyler, appointed by the U.S. Secretary of State, who concluded that García ally and National Guard Director Vides Casanova had been informed soon after the murders of the actual events and perpetrators in the churchwomen's case,<sup>247</sup> but had aided in a cover-up by failing to take any action for seven months following the detention, rape and executions of the churchwomen.<sup>248</sup> A serious investigation would have required moving up the chain of command, and the guardsmen who committed the murders were under the direct command of Lieutenant Colonel Oscar Edgardo Casanova Vejar, the cousin of the Director of the National Guard and the officer in charge of the National Guard units assigned to the airport at the time of the murders of the churchwomen.<sup>249</sup>

<sup>246</sup> In March 1984, a high level Salvador Army Intelligence officer informed U.S. officials that the guardsmen who perpetrated the killing had been promised that the judiciary would order their release, which meant that they never could be tried again. See "Update on Cases of U.S. Citizens Missing or Murdered in El Salvador," Confidential, Memorandum, Excised Copy 657, May 23, 1984. ES05258. In 1998, after more than seventeen years of silence, all four of the lower-level former National Guardsmen convicted in the killings of the churchwomen publicly admitted for the first time that they acted only after receiving "orders from above," thus confirming this information. The men first made these admissions in interviews with attorneys from the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, and later two of them agreed to be interviewed by Larry Rohter, a reporter from the New York Times. In the interviews with Rohter, the ex-guardsmen repeated and amplified the admissions made to the Lawyers Committee, stating that at the time of the churchwomen's capture and killing, their superiors had told them: "Don't be worried... This is an order that comes from higher levels, and nothing is going to happen to us." Two guardsmen told Rohter that after the murders, they had been put under pressure by their superiors to "deny everything" as part of an elaborate official cover-up. Larry Rohter, The New York Times, April 3, 1998, pp. A1, A12.

<sup>247</sup> Additional U.S. declassified documents also reveal evidence of a cover-up at the highest levels of the military. The month following the murders, Deputy Sergeant Colindres admitted his involvement in the killings of the churchwomen to his National Guard superior, Sgt. Dagoberto Martinez Martinez, and Martinez Martinez, in turn, ordered Colindres to provide that information to Director General Vides Casanova Harold R. Tyler, Jr., The Churchwomen Murders: A Report to the Secretary of State, 2 December 1983 (known as the Tyler Report), U.S. Declassified Document, "The Churchwomen Murders: A Report to the Secretary of State [Tyler Report]," Secret, Report, 617-A, December 2, 1983, ES04377; see also United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, From Madness to Hope: The 12 Year War in El Salvador, U.N. Doc S/25500 (March, 1993), p. 64, which refer to the February 1982 confession by a National Guardsman.

<sup>248</sup> Even without full knowledge of the facts which came out well after Judge Tyler's investigation concluded, his final report stated: "[w]e believe as well that it is quite possible that Colonel Carlos Eugenio Vides Casanova, then head of the National Guard and now a General and Minister of Defense, was aware of, and for a time acquiesced in, the cover-up." Fulfilling his obligation to investigate, Defense Minister García had only to order these two subordinates, National Guard commander, Vides Casanova and Casanova Vejar, the officer in charge, to tell him the truth about the churchwomen's murders and its subsequent cover-up. And this order should have been obeyed since Vides Casanova, in his own words, took orders directly from the Minister of Defense.<sup>250</sup>

Instead, the outcome was different. Despite reports that the guardsmen were coerced and bribed to keep silent<sup>251</sup> and that several people at high levels of the Salvadoran government knew of Col. Casanova Vejar's involvement in the killing of the churchwomen, only weeks after the murders Casanova Vejar was transferred to command the Second Brigade, which was conveniently located across the country -- a move reportedly designed to provide protection for the killers of the Americans.<sup>252</sup>

No senior officer was ever investigated for the murder of the churchwomen in El Salvador. As the Truth Commission concluded: "The Minister of Defense at the time, General José Guillermo García, made no serious effort to conduct a thorough investigation of responsibility for the murders of the churchwomen."<sup>253</sup> The CIA was even more direct in its assessment: García obstructed justice in that he "allowed foot dragging and cover-ups in the military during the investigation of the assassination of American nuns."<sup>254</sup> The reality is even starker: through a combination of actions of omission (failure to investigate at least two key officers and failure to question thoroughly his own National Guard Director General) and commission (transfer of a suspected officer to a new command position), Minister García

Case 4. THE SHERATON MURDERS:

Defense Minister García Denied the Killings of Two U.S. AIFLD Advisors and Agrarian Reform President at the Sheraton Hotel (January 3, 1981)

On the night of January 3, 1981, in San Salvador's Sheraton Hotel, two National Guard agents entered San Salvador's Sheraton Hotel and murdered José Rodolfo Viera Lizama, President of El Salvador's land reform organization, (the Salvadoran Institute for Agrarian Reform or ISTA), along with two U.S. advisers, Michael P. Hammer and Mark David Pearlman, from the American Institute for Free Labor Development (AIFLD). It was evident from the day of the murders that this was a death squad or military killing and was part of a larger campaign to terrorize supporters of land reform.<sup>255</sup> National Guard assassins had failed to kill Mr. Viera in several previous attempts; he had also received numerous death threats, including being named on the public list of "traitors," by the Secret Anti-Communist death squad and the military press agency, COPREFA, that Defense Minister García had failed to disavow.<sup>256</sup> After constant and extensive pressure from the U.S., the actual triggermen responsible for the Sheraton killings (lower-level National Guardsmen Santiago Gómez González and José Dimas Valle Acevedo) were eventually convicted of their involvement in the case but were soon released under El Salvador's first (1987) Amnesty Act. No higher officer was ever held responsible.

The Sheraton killings are especially illustrative of how military officers were protected under General García. Since two U.S. officials carrying out the land reform policy of the U.S. government were murdered, more external pressure was exerted in this case than any other prior <sup>256</sup> The Intelligence Section of the National Guard (S-2) had decided to eliminate ISTA President Viera months before the Sheraton murders, and National Guard agents involved carried out the murders in a manner characteristic of the death squads. In May 1980, the Ejército Secreto Anti-Comunista publicly referred to Viera as a "Communist traitor" who should be eliminated by "patriots" who were fighting for a Government that would respect "private property." Viera received repeated death threats and there were multiple failed attempts against his life by the National Guard prior to his murder in 1980. Note, however, that Viera's name did not appear on the military COPREFA death list, which copied most of the other names from the ESA list; Viera had already been killed when it was issued. The U.S. government and the U.N. Truth Commission ultimately concluded that they had sufficient evidence to conclude that the earlier attacks on Viera were also planned by the Intelligence Section (G-2) of the National Guard. case, except the murder of the churchwomen, and this forced the military had to find myriads of ways to protect its own. This was particularly difficult because the U.S. military attaché, Brian Bosch, was living at the Sheraton when the killings occurred, knew the victims, and was one of the first on the scene, thus he was able to protect important evidence so that it could not be destroyed or ignored. Bosch was also able to inform Minister of Defense García immediately of the killings and request the full cooperation of the police.<sup>257</sup> This meant that two of the civilian figures involved in the assassination, wealthy landowners Hans Christ and Ricardo Sol Meza, were soon identified, as were some of the National Guard members involved, despite a shoddy National Police investigation.

U.S. pressure was exerted immediately due to the new International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981, in which Congress conditioned further aid to the Salvadoran government on “a good faith effort” to bring to justice the murders of U.S. citizens in December 1980 (the churchwomen) and January 1981 (AIFLD advisers). Because the Reagan administration had to certify to this progress to the Congress, U.S. both Secretary of State Haig and Ambassador Hinton warned Minister of Defense García after four months of inactivity that “the accumulating impatience in the United States with the dilatory actions of the Salvadoran Armed Forces to get to the bottom of these murders could jeopardize our economic and military assistance.”<sup>258</sup> Only then, Ricardo Sol Meza, a civilian, was arrested.<sup>259</sup>

A secret telegram sent by the U.S. Ambassador to the Secretary of State well after the fact provides chilling details of the involvement of Salvadoran death squad members operating directly out of the intelligence section (G-2 or S-2) in the Sheraton murders. It named the two landowners and Major Denis Moran as the “intellectual authors” of the crime. It also described the murders, including a description of the “celebratory” payment details from these wealthy oligarchs to Major Moran, one of the freed extremists from San Luis Finca, who subsequently ordered his subordinates to carry out the killings.<sup>260</sup>

Early on, it was evident this was a National Guard/landowner operation and high-ranking officers were involved in planning and ordering the murders, but investigations of various sorts dragged on for seven years. During García 's tenure, when the U.S. government learned that the two civilian paymasters of these murders were to be released (perhaps along with the National Guardsmen being held for the killing of the churchwomen), diplomatic instructions from the Secretary of State to the U.S. ambassador were unusually strong: "We consider it essential that the suspects in both these cases remain under detention while the investigation continue, and you should continue to emphasize this point to García and other GOES officials in the strongest possible terms."<sup>261</sup> When this did not prove convincing enough, in a highly unusual act CIA envoy Lt. General Vernon Walters was sent to meet directly with General García to make clear that the future of aid was at stake. The Defense Minister responded as he had in the churchwomen case; he set up a "working group" headed by a friendly colonel to investigate and brought in his tanda "compadre," National Police Director Lopez Nuila, to reopen the police investigation into the Sheraton case. Despite the testimony of eyewitnesses and extensive evidence that the Sheraton murders were carried out by active duty members of the G-2 Intelligence Section of the National Guard, neither the National Police nor the working group seemed able to produce any proof on its own, and the Fifth Penal Court closed the case in December 1981.

It took the combination of investigators from the FBI and the American Institute of Free Labor Development (the employers of the murdered Americans), a number of U.S. investigations, and pressure from the upcoming July 1982 certification hearing where progress had to be demonstrated or aid would be terminated, to finally induce Defense Minister García to create another working group – the third investigative effort following the failure of the National Police and the first task force. García included the Director General of the National Guard, Vides Casanova, in the new investigative working group despite the fact that Vides Casanova already knew members of his own National Guard were the murderers, and had received their assassination orders from their superiors<sup>262</sup> -- yet once again nothing was done. Not surprisingly, despite the confessions of the actual triggermen who testified that they killed under the instructions of their commanders Lt. Lopez Sibrian and Capt. Avila Avila, (two officers who had been released at San Luis Finca), the corroboration by dozens of witnesses, and the results of FBI polygraph examinations, a Salvadoran judge found “insufficient evidence” to warrant any further inquiry or hold them for trial.<sup>263</sup>

In the end, the three men freed by Defense Minister García at San Luis Finca, Lieutenant López Sibrián (second-in command of the S-2 or G-2 Intelligence Unit of the National Guard) and Captain Avila Avila (also of G-2) as well as their commander Major Denis Moran, were never sanctioned nor punished despite the direct intervention of President Reagan.<sup>264</sup> The role of <sup>262</sup> By that date, one of the two National Guardsmen identified as the gunmen in the Sheraton murders, Jose Dimas Valle Acevedo, had been detained by the National Guard and had made a statement at National Guard Headquarters which he subsequently ratified on September 24 in a sworn judicial statement in which he named National Guard Major Denis Moran, Lt. López Sibrián, National Guard Captain Avila, Hans Krist (Christ), and another National Guard corporal named Santiago Gomez Gonzalez as also having been involved in the Sheraton killings. When probed by questions in court, Corporal Valle responded: “All members of the military are governed by rules to the effect that any order from a superior must be carried out, regardless of the nature of the order.” U.S. Declassified Document, “Statement on AIFLD/ISTA Murders before the Fifth Criminal Court in San Salvador,” Statement by Jose Dimas Valle Acevedo sent by U.S. Embassy, El Salvador, to U.S. Department of State, Washington DC, September 24, 1982, ES03444.

On 10 December 1981, in the village of El Mozote in the Department of Morazán, units of the Atlacatl Battalion detained, without resistance, all the men, women and children. The following day, 11 December, after spending the night locked in their homes, the entire village was deliberately and systematically executed in groups. The villagers were often blindfolded, forced to lie on the ground, and shot in the back of the head; some were beheaded. First, the men were tortured and executed, and then the women, (some of whom were raped).<sup>268</sup> Finally, the children were killed en masse in the convent where they were held, machined gunned through the windows of the building. The average age of the murdered children was six years. Rufina Amaya, one of the sole survivors, reported hearing the screams of her own children.<sup>269</sup> The next

The experts noted: "the average age of the children was approximately 6 years. See Clyde Snow, John Fitzpatrick, Robert H. Kirschner and Douglas Scott, Report of Forensic Investigation. <sup>272</sup> This expert report concentrates on the town of El Mozote for purposes of brevity. Nonetheless, it is important to note that this massacre was more widespread. In some of the smaller towns, villagers assumed that women, children and elders would not be harmed, so although the men fled, everyone else remained in their homes. Graffiti left on the walls of some buildings in La Joya read "The Atlacatl battalion passed through here." A common pattern in the smaller villages was a house-by-house search, followed by the execution of small groups using firearms. As part of the scorched earth policy employed by the military, many of the homes were burned. In Cerro Pando a small group of soldiers arrived before the larger battalion and warned townspeople to escape, promising that if they stayed, the other soldiers would not be so forgiving. In Arambala, everyone in the town was corralled into the church. With women and children left inside, the men were taken out and asked how they would like to die: sitting or lying down. When there was no response, they were shot. Gonzalo Solano. "Corte IDH Asegura Decisión Sobre El Salvador Para Este Año". El Nuevo Herald, March 24, 2012.

Col. José Domingo Monterrosa (freed at San Luis Finca) who was in charge of the units actually taking part, though Jaime Florez Grijalva (one of the conspirators listed in the San Luis Finca papers) was the Commander of the Third Brigade responsible for overseeing the entire operation. The enormity of the military operation notwithstanding, the Salvadoran military met no combat and no resistance in El Mozote, a village that had significant support for the armed forces. Forensic investigations, which began in 1991 (see Photo 7), presented extensive evidence that the victims were summarily executed, as the few surviving witnesses have testified, and that there was “no evidence to support the theory of a confrontation between two groups.” The experts who conducted the laboratory analysis added: “the physical evidence from the exhumation of the convent house at El Mozote confirms the allegations of a mass murder.” They went on to say, on the same point: “There is no evidence to support the contention that these victims, almost all young children, were involved in combat or were caught in the crossfire of

The El Mozote massacre became public knowledge more than a month after its occurrence through front-page publications in both the New York Times and Washington Post on January 27, 1982.<sup>278</sup> Coinciding with a new round of debate in Congress over aid to El Salvador's armed forces, the news created a firestorm. The massacre became headline news in Europe as horrifying witness reports came to light, and the National Council of Churches and human rights groups strongly pressured congressmen to find the truth. Nonetheless, the day after the publication of the El Mozote massacre, Defense Minister García denied any knowledge of military actions at there,<sup>279</sup> and he claimed that any accounts of the massacre were part of a guerilla campaign to block aid from the U.S. "We have absolutely no information of any military action in Mozote,"<sup>280</sup> he said -- a public stance he maintained for twenty years.

A flurry of U.S. cable traffic best illustrates the Defense Minister's modus operandi of deniability. It bears close examination because this time the Defense Minister's denials did not work. The embassy, under great pressure to confirm or disconfirm the massacre and contain damage to U.S. policy prior to the testimony of the Secretary of State in aid certification hearings in Congress, tried to do its own investigation: Ambassador Hinton sent the defense attaché to interview Commander Monterrosa of the Atlacatl Brigade. Monterrosa, in turn, claimed he could not speak without the authorization of higher-ups, but nonetheless effectively confirmed the Atlacatl presence in El Mozote and acknowledged that non-combatants were undoubtedly killed.<sup>281</sup> The Atlacatl commander gave the U.S. defense attaché the clear impression that "precluding permission from General García, Minister of Defense, definitive answers as to the mission, positions, and actions participated in, of the Atlacatl Battalion in Operation "Rescate" may never be forthcoming."<sup>282</sup>

For U.S. policymakers, the onus was then on Defense Minister García to give them straight facts and investigate the massacre of El Mozote. This never occurred. Because any serious investigation depended on the Defense Minister, who coincidentally was on his way to the U.S. to meet with members of Congress, Ambassador Hinton "warned García to be ready to respond to the Morazan [El Mozote] massacre story." Hinton wrote: "He [García] was his usual cocky self. 'I'll deny it and prove it was fabricated.'"<sup>283</sup> "An obviously angry Secretary of State

<sup>281</sup> Shortly before Colonel Monterrosa's death in a sabotaged helicopter, reporter James LeMoyné asked him about El Mozote. Alexander Haig responded by directing the embassy to inform General García: "He is not welcome, repeat, not welcome to visit the U.S. at this juncture."<sup>284</sup>

The Defense Minister continued to deny the massacre long after Ambassador Hinton came to the conclusion that "something happened" at El Mozote and conveyed this to the State Department. As Ambassador Hinton sought to discover the truth, he ran into the wall created by the centralization of authority in the Defense Minister. When the Ambassador asked his Milgroup commander if "it were possible High Command did not know where and when their field forces operated. No, it was not, he told me." Hinton then sent this same officer to see the Salvadoran chief of staff, who said the "the Defense Minister wanted no one other than himself to deal with that question." Hinton, in reporting this to the State Department, added his own appraisal of the Defense Minister's reliability:

"I find García's assertion ... 'we have absolutely no information on military actions in El Mozote' to be stonewalling without credibility. I have tried to warn him re need to face up to problem, but my impression is he thinks categorical denial is way to handle question."

Ambassador Hinton then tried talking directly about El Mozote to Defense Minister García . García replied: "the Morazán [El Mozote] business was a 'novela,'-- [translation: a fairy tale]."<sup>285</sup>

Defense Minister García never ordered any investigation, even though he knew of many allegations and reports of an atrocity<sup>286</sup> and had the legal responsibility to do so. An immediate investigation would have been possible since the Defense Minister had access to helicopters to

<sup>284</sup> Secretary Haig added: "His presence can only add to an already acrimonious debate which has been fueled by reporting of massacres in Morazan and, more recently, the night of January 30.31 in San Antonio Abad." This latter massacre was in the outskirts of San Salvador and thus was immediately confirmed. Further cable traffic makes it clear that the U.S began to seek alternatives candidates for the position of defense minister of El Salvador at this time. See "General García's Visit to the U.S." confidential cable from the Department of State, February 2, 1982, EL00739.

<sup>285</sup> The Defense Minister added: It is "pure Marxist propaganda devoid of foundation." After some discussion, General García admitted that "the Atlacatl Battalion had been at El Mozote," but then he "reiterated that the story was a pack of lies." These cables are quoted extensively in Mark Danner, "The Truth of El Mozote," The New Yorker, December 6, 1993 and are reproduced in his book, The Massacre of El Mozote, New York: Vintage Press, 1994. Also see "The General (García) Who Came to Lunch," confidential cable, February 9, 1982, EL00742.

<sup>286</sup> Not only had the U.S. ambassador informed him, but also General García admitted under oath that he read it in the press. reach El Mozote; the massacre would have been easy to corroborate soon after the fact because of the profusion of unburied bodies. As the Truth Commission found: "There is full evidence that General Jose Guillermo García, then Minister of Defense, initiated no investigations that might have enabled the facts to be established."

The Truth Commission Report is especially damning in the El Mozote massacre case: "There is no evidence that any effort was made to investigate" the killings of almost 1000 civilians, more than half under the age of 18. The authorities dismissed these reports as enemy propaganda. Were it not for the children's skeletons at El Mozote, some people would still be disputing that such massacres took place."<sup>287</sup>

More than thirty years later, on April 27, 2012, the Salvadoran government officially accepted responsibility for the massacre at El Mozote, admitting that the state "engaged in a conscious and systematic process of denial over the last 27 years."<sup>288</sup> The President of El Salvador, Mauricio Funes, sometimes breaking into tears at the site of the massacre, said: "In three days and three nights, the biggest massacre of civilians was committed in contemporary Latin American history." The President then instructed the armed forces to cease treating the military commanders responsible for El Mozote as the heroes they were not."<sup>289</sup>

XI: CONCLUSION: DEFENSE MINISTER GARCÍA AUTHORIZED, ASSISTED, OTHERWISE PARTICIPATED IN AND/OR FACILITATED THE COMMISSION OF EXTRAJUDICIAL KILLINGS AND TORTURE IN EL SALVADOR.

Defense Minister García could have ordered his subordinates to stop to human rights abuses in the El Salvador Armed Forces simply by calling together 105 field commanders. He possessed the knowledge and evidence to identify many subordinates who committed these abuses, and he had the capacity to could find out what officers were in command of these subordinates. He <sup>288</sup> President Funes asked forgiveness for "the biggest massacre of civilians in the contemporary history of Latin America" and said there could be no true peace until there is compensation for victims and penalties for perpetrators. He asked the Attorney General to review existing legislation and propose amendments or new laws to allow criminal sanctions to be imposed on those who participated in the worst human rights violations. could review logbooks and records of military missions. He had the authority to remove officers responsible for abuses from positions of command and from the military. He could investigate officers and punish officers by removing them from the armed forces, which was his duty by law. He also could turn over human rights abusers to unbiased judges in the civilian justice system and provide protection for these judges as a means of punishing abusers.

Instead, Defense Minister García took the following actions and inactions:

- He appointed known human rights abusers to both senior and middle-range positions, especially in the intelligence units of the military and security forces; reintroduced known human rights abusers back into the military after they had already been purged; failed to remove officers who had been caught with evidence of their participation in human rights abuses; and removed or transferred reformist officers who could have been a counterweight to human rights abusers.
- He tolerated and implicitly condoned death squads operating out of the headquarters of the military and security forces by failing to investigate and/or remove officers and their subordinates involved in these actions.
- He failed to denounce publicly the official Armed Forces publication of a death list or investigate this act. Rodolfo Viera, the chief target in the Sheraton killings, was among the names on that list and was one of the people subsequently assassinated.
- He permitted subordinates to intimidate civilians in his presence and failed to remove an officer who threatened them with at least 200,000 killings.
- He expressed "satisfaction" over the murders of six (FDR) opposition leaders in the presence of his subordinates, thereby indicating approval of extrajudicial killings.
- He appointed biased military judges who covered up evidence and held sham investigations in the few cases where external pressure forced him to hold any inquiry. This occurred in the San Luis Finca arrests, the murders of four American churchwomen, and the assassinations of Rodolfo Viera and his two U.S. advisers in the Sheraton.
- He authorized combined operations involving the coordination of a number of different forces and battalions, sometimes including those of neighboring Honduras. These strikes created effective "free fire zones" that resulted in the massacres of thousands of non-combatant civilians, including children, women and the elderly. Massacres took place at Rio Sumpul and El Mozote but also at Giron, San Francisco Angulo, Rio Lempa, La Quesera, Laguna Seca, El Calabozo and countless other places.

- He repeatedly denied that these massacres had occurred and failed to investigate virtually all of them. He failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the repetition of such acts. As a result, the same units were used in other operations and followed the same procedures. Without being ordered to change these practices and without investigations, the same units of the military and security forces that committed human rights violations felt unconstrained to continue to operate in the same brutal fashion.
- He failed to punish even one officer for any human rights violation.

Based on the foregoing, it is my conclusion that Defense Minister Jose Guillermo García Merino authorized, participated in, assisted and/or facilitated some of the worst human rights abuses in modern Latin American history.

Appendix III

A Partial<sup>1</sup> List of Massacres in El Salvador The García Period: 1979-1983

Minister of Defense García on why it is impossible for massacres by the military to have occurred in El Salvador:

“I did not know anything about massacres... Confrontations, yes. Massacres, no. Understanding them as such, it would be to accept an illegal action of the army.”<sup>2</sup>

Minister of Defense García ordered no investigations of 58 of the 59 massacres listed here. The Las Hoyas Massacre (no. 58) was investigated only due to U.S. pressure and the military judge, an extremist appointed by Minister García, found no military or security forces responsible for the Las Hoyas killings.

1. Massacre of Tacachico<sup>3</sup>

Date: March, 1980

Location: La Libertad

Casualties: 50

Perpetrator: military and or security forces

2. Massacre of Hacienda Colina<sup>4</sup>

Date: March 17, 1980

Location: Suchitoto, Cuscatlan

Casualties: 20

Perpetrator: Combined forces of the Armed Forces and National Guard

3. Massacre of Palo Grande (La Massacre de los Acosta)<sup>5</sup>

Date: March 19, 1980

Location: Palo Grande, Department of Cuscatlán

<sup>1</sup> This is only a partial list because the exhumation of massacre sites is ongoing in El Salvador even today. Thus the victim count is generally raised, as it has been in the case of El Mozote, moving from almost 800 victims to over 1000. Forensic digs are still continuing in El Salvador. This list is also partial because some massacres were never reported. Finally, for the purpose of this appendix, a massacre is defined as the killing of ten or more non-combatants. Social scientists generally use a figure of five or more, and in this case 75 massacres would be listed here, and the number of uninvestigated massacres would also be higher. ✓

4. Massacre at Rio Sumpul

Date: May 14, 1980

Location: Las Aradas, Chalatenango on the banks of the Rio Sumpul on the border with Honduras

Casualties: At least 300<sup>6</sup> (Even official reports range up to 600 victims<sup>7</sup>)

Perpetrator: Combined forces of Military Detachment No. 1, National Guard, ORDEN (Also reports of participation by Honduran military<sup>8</sup>)

The UN Truth commission confirmed that at least 300 people were massacred while attempting to cross the Rio Sumpul into Honduras from El Salvador.

Defense Minister José Guillermo García denied these accounts, saying, "There have been dead in that area, but not in such 'industrial' quantities."
[see Case 1 in testimony].

5. Massacre of San Francisco Guajoyo

Date: May 29, 1980

Location: San Francisco Guajoyo cooperative in the Canton of Belén Güijat, Metapán District, Department of Santa Ana

Casualties: 12 (List of names published in UCS Communique)<sup>10</sup>

Perpetrator: Combined forces of 50-80 members of the Treasury Police, National Police, National Guard and the Second Infantry Brigade

In the morning of May 29, 1980, security forces attacked San Francisco Guajoyo, a cooperative established in 1977 and home to about 260. On the day of the killings, security forces dragged people from their homes and took them to a central farm, where they summarily executed 10 members of the cooperative and 2 employees of the Salvadorian Institute for Agrarian Reform (ISTA). The soldiers then entered Santa Rosita, torturing and subsequently killing 17 people. 18-year-old Julia was hung from a tree, sexually assaulted and then decapitated. As a result of a military sweep in the area, many displaced families sought refuge in the home of Pedro Zamora, where, on the day of the massacre, about 150 refugees were eating lunch when the attack occurred. It is estimated that 20 guards from the National Police and the Hacienda Police encircled the house at midday. Given that there were very few guards in comparison to the number of refugees, many of the people in the house were able to flee (albeit many wounded).

20. Massacre of El Junquillo

Date: March 3, 1981 and March 12, 1981

Location: Cantón El Junquillo, Cacaopera, Northern Morazán Province

Casualties: At least 50 (UN Commission can provide identity for at least 39)

Perpetrator: Army and Civil Guard (Military Detachment No. 6)

For a period of eight to twelve days in early March 1981, the army, led by military Captain Carlos Napoleón Medina Garay, maintained a consistent presence in the Cantón of El Junquillo. Upon his departure on the 3rd, Captain Medina Garay gave the order to exterminate the civilian population of El Junquillo, which, at the time, consisted mainly of women, children and elders. On the 11th, soldiers shelled the canton for 15 minutes and proceeded to enter the community, surrounding the houses.<sup>36</sup> On the 12th, the soldiers carried out the massacre, in addition to raping many of the women and even girls under the age of 12. The UN Truth Commission found that the government and judiciary failed to initiate any sort of investigation into the massacre. On March 23rd, 2012, ICE deported Medina Garay, and an official commented: “his continued presence in the country would be an insult to those who have sought U.S. protection from human rights violators.”<sup>37</sup>

Date: April 7, 1981

Location: Soyapango, San Salvador

Casualties: Officially 24, Reports range from 23 to 30

Perpetrator: Treasury Police

In the early morning of April 7, Treasury Police killed between 23 and 30 people in the working-class suburb of San Salvador, Soyapango, dragging them from their homes and shooting them as part of a series of planned raids.<sup>41</sup> One young man was found with his testicles cut off and placed on his body.<sup>42</sup> The next day the newspaper El Mundo published the names, ages (ranging from 13 to 48) and occupations of the victims.<sup>43</sup>

The Treasury Police initially reported that the incident began when guerillas “ambushed” and fired upon a Treasury Police patrol in Soyapango, killing one officer and wounding three.<sup>44</sup> The Treasury Police accounts changed once witnesses came forth and contradicted the story. The massacre in Soyapango is particularly noteworthy because under mounting pressure from the press and U.S. officials “the government publicly acknowledged that members of the security forces had been involved.”<sup>45</sup>

When asked about the incident during a speech made to the American Chamber of Commerce, Defense Minister José Guillermo García promised that “an intensive investigation would be made of this incident.”<sup>46</sup> The U.S. and the Christian Democratic Party demanded the removal of Treasury Director Moran, but Minister García protected him.

In what has been deemed one of the most “capricious” massacres, members of the army and civil defense killed 23 members of the Las Lajas soccer team (named after a plantation that sponsored them) and their family members. The events began on the night of the 26th when the team was returning from a soccer game in Sonsonate. The team was stopped at a military checkpoint on the road when one of the teammates struck up an argument with a soldier.<sup>64</sup> The team was allowed to continue on their way home to the town of Armenia. On the 30th, soldiers arrived in Armenia as early as 7 p.m. and warned all of the townspeople to remain indoors because they would be conducting a house-by-house search. Using a list, the soldiers systematically entered the homes of the soccer team, shot and killed the players (and some family members), and dragged their bodies out onto the street. Later the army returned to take away some bodies or move them from where they had been initially dumped. Some of the bodies were taken by a truck and deposited in the river, so bodies washed up on the banks of nearby towns. When family members attempted to collect the bodies of loved ones, the army told them: “if you try to do this, you will be killed like pigs.”<sup>65</sup> In addition, families were told that they “could not have the bodies for burial because it might defame the army.”<sup>66</sup> There was no report of the incident in any local papers, so the massacre did not become widely known until Msgr. Arturo Rivera y Damas, acting archbishop of El Salvador, publicly condemned the events during his Sunday service. He did not accuse the army, but noted that the massacre occurred after 11 p.m. when only the army and police can be out on the streets. In spite of military cover-up efforts, witnesses positively identified the killers as army soldiers.<sup>67</sup> A comprehensive account and testimony was given anonymously to the Salvadoran Human Rights Commission, a private organization that “the government has accused the group of aiding what it says are leftist attempts to defame and discredit the U.S. backed Salvadoran military.”<sup>68</sup> Although it was reported that government officials had begun an investigation and had arrested three suspects<sup>69</sup>, little was done to thoroughly pursue the matter. October 15th, 1981.<sup>77</sup> Six days before the military operation, the FMLN destroyed the bridge.<sup>78</sup>

Although historically the event is known as the “Massacre of La Quesera”, the massacre was not an isolated incident, but the sum total of the atrocities.<sup>79</sup> During the massacre, soldiers would surround a community and advance inward, raping, torturing and killing. Women and children were forced to kneel and then face executions.<sup>80</sup> Soldiers reportedly killed parents in front of their children.<sup>81</sup> The military maintained a presence in the area for some time after the massacre to prevent any form of burial, letting dogs eat the remains.<sup>82</sup>

This massacre is notable for the brutality of the acts committed against children. Soldiers took some children in helicopters and tossed them out over the Lempa river.<sup>83</sup> Salvador García found his daughter’s body in a tree after she was thrown from a helicopter.<sup>84</sup> A State Department cable from October 1981 confirms the use of helicopters by the armed forces in this operation.<sup>85</sup> Milagro de Pilar Martínez remembers finding her daughter in pieces and with bullet wounds, while her other two were children were taken by soldiers.<sup>86</sup> In 2004 an exhumation allowed a forensic team to uncover and investigate 41 bodies. The Tutela Legal del Arzobispado subsequently filed a suit requesting an investigation and naming those believed to be responsible for the military actions in La Quesera, among them: Defense Minister García.<sup>87</sup>

Location: El Mozote, Department of Morazán

Perpetrator: Combined forces of the Atlacatl Battalion with aid of Air Force, Artillery Brigade "Teniente Coronel Oscar Osorio" and 3rd Infantry Brigade of San Miguel

From December 7 - 17, 1981, soldiers from the Atlacatl brigade swept through Mozote and surrounding mountain communities as part of Operation "Rescate" ("Recovery"). Artillery and aerial bombs struck towns accused of harboring guerrillas before infantry invaded.<sup>92</sup> In El Mozote, the entire population was filed into the central plaza and forced to form two lines, one for women and children, and one for men. All were murdered. This is the largest massacre in El Salvador as well as in all of contemporary Latin America.

On January 28, 1982, United Press International reported Minister García denying knowledge of military actions at El Mozote. García told the U.S Defense attache that the Morazan business was a "Novela," pure Marxist propaganda devoid of foundation. He also alled this massacre "pure fabrication." See Case 5 in Part X of testimony.

On April 24, 2012, the Salvadoran government officially accepted responsibility for the massacre at El Mozote and it admitted that it "engaged in a conscious and systematic process of denial over the last 27 years."<sup>93</sup>

Officially titled “Operación Limpieza” (“Operation Clean-Up”) by the Salvadoran army, this brutal military initiative became known as “La Guinda de Mayo” (the March of May) to describe the flight of villagers in late May and June as the army swept across the region and carried out a “scorched earth” campaign. It began on May 27 and 28, 1982, with helicopters moving as reinforcements to Arcatao, helicopters bombing La Laguna Seca, and mortar shelling into La Laguna Seca, La Motañona and El Gallinero – napalm and white phosphorous grenades were used.<sup>105</sup> During the two weeks of the operation, the army “deliberately pursued the civilian population...” and any groups of fleeing peasants encountering military groups were killed.<sup>106</sup> Helicopters and planes supported infantry troops to gun down unarmed fleeing peasants; survivor testimony affirms that at no point did the Salvadoran army seek to distinguish between guerrilla fighters and civilians.<sup>107</sup>

A large group of civilians numbering upwards of 200 people converged in El Calabozo while fleeing the military operation "Teniente Coronel Mario Azenón Palma" that had begun a few days earlier on August 18th.<sup>114</sup> Raúl González Arévalo remembers how the soldiers caught up with and trapped the refugees by the banks of a river. At that point the soldiers opened fire using machine guns and rifles. They killed a mountain of people, children, old people and women."<sup>115</sup> There was a strong guerilla presence in the region and many of the victims were guerilla supporters, but survivors maintain that there were no armed guerilla members present at the time of the massacre.<sup>116</sup> No effort was made on the part of the government to investigate the massacre. Minister of Defense García claimed that an official investigation had produced no evidence of the massacre, and repeated this claim to the commission. On February 22, 1983, 18 people, including two children and two old men, were taken from the Las Hojas cooperative and the nearby town of Agua Santa and subsequently shot and killed.<sup>122</sup> The bodies were discovered the next day in the underbrush on the banks of the Cuyuapa river.<sup>123</sup> All the victims had been shot in the head at point blank range<sup>124</sup> with automatic weapons and were found with their hands bound behind their backs.<sup>125</sup> Witnesses remember men in military uniforms selected the victims from a list and took them away in army trucks.<sup>126</sup>

President Magaña and Defense Minister García publicly promised a thorough investigation of the massacre after significant U.S. pressure. García appointed Col. Napoléon Alvarado, an extremist who had been released at San Luis Finca, to conduct the inquiry.<sup>127</sup> The civilian leadership found that the military was responsible. The military investigation concluded no members of the armed forces were responsible.
