

Sign in

START YOUR WEBSITE

Liberia church massacre survivors sue alleged perpetrator in U.S. court

By Joseph Ax and James Giahvue, Reuters • February 12, 2018

By Joseph Ax and James Giahvue

NEW YORK/MONROVIA (Reuters) - Four survivors of a church massacre that killed 600 people during the Liberian civil war on Monday filed a civil lawsuit in U.S. court against the man they accuse of having ordered the attack.

The lawsuit, brought in federal court in Philadelphia, accuses Moses Thomas of directing the mass killing on July 29, 1990, while a colonel in the Armed Forces of Liberia. Thomas came to the United States under an immigration program intended to help victims of the conflict and now lives in a Philadelphia suburb, according to the lawsuit.

Attempts to reach Thomas were unsuccessful late on Monday, but he told the BBC that the allegations were "nonsense," according to a report on the broadcaster's website.

The church killing was among the most brutal atrocities committed against civilians during 14 years of near-constant conflict, which saw child soldiers enlisted in the war before it ended in 2003.

Hundreds of families took refuge at St. Peter's Lutheran Church, a Red Cross humanitarian shelter, in the country's capital of Monrovia, seeking protection from

Popular in the Community

Florida lawmaker fires aide who allegedly called mass shooting survivors 'actors'

6,045 reactions

4%

67%

29%

25 of the Shortest Men in Hollywood

Livingly Sponsored

17

Bettadont: That's how they treat one another in Liberia and in Africa.....his past followed his footsteps to America, and has caught up with him.

Thomas headed up the army's elite anti-terrorism unit, indiscriminately. Soldiers then used machetes to hack others to death, while some victims survived by hiding under the bodies of others.

The lawsuit can only recover monetary damages from Thomas if successful. It could potentially lead to other actions against him, but lawyers for the victims noted that Liberia has never established a tribunal to investigate wartime human rights violations.

The case was filed under U.S. laws that allow foreign victims of war crimes abroad to sue the perpetrators in U.S. courts.

"Cases like these should be tried in the countries where the crimes were committed," Nushin Sarkarati, an attorney with the Center for Justice and Accountability, which represents the four anonymous plaintiffs, said in a statement. "Because that is not yet possible in Liberia, the victims have to push to try perpetrators in the courts of the countries where they have chosen to hide."

Activists hailed the case as a first step toward holding those responsible for the church massacre accountable.

"I think victims and survivors of the St. Peter Lutheran Church massacre will be at peace this evening," said Peterson Sonyah, executive director of the Liberia Massacre Survivors Association.

(Reporting by Joseph Ax in New York and James Giahvue in Monrovia; Editing by Tom Brown)

 17 reactions 10% 63% 27%

Sign in to post a message.

Top Reactions ▾

 rog 8 days ago ⋮
Another evil black sneaks into our country under false claims. Hope these people get the justice they seek.
↩ Reply Replies (1) 👍 5 💬

323 reactions 77% 66% 25%

Young father shot dead in Camden after returning from shore

18 reactions 0% 75% 25%

Olympics viewers in L.A. witnessed an absolutely insane live car chase

1,690 reactions 4% 78% 18%

Kourtney is Definitely the Most Stylish Sister

StyleBistro Sponsored

The 'crisis actors' lie spreads in wake of Florida shooting

7,774 reactions 4% 66% 30%

Seals make this beach 'the smelliest place on Earth'

40 reactions 0% 78% 22%